A parent cannot recover damages for child's wrongful death, if parent's negligence proximately contributed thereto.

12. Death ⚡24—Father held not negligent per se in permitting 11 year old daughter to cross street unattended several feet ahead of him.

It was not negligence per se for father to permit his 11 year old daughter to cross street unattended five or six feet ahead of him, after passing to rear of street car from which they had alighted.

13. Death ⚡103(3)—Father's contributory negligence in permitting 11 year old daughter, killed by automobile, to cross street ahead of him behind street car, held for jury.

Whether weak and partially paralyzed father, returning with his 11 year old daughter from hospital, failed to exercise due care in permitting her to cross street unattended five or six feet ahead of him, after passing to rear of street car, from which they had alighted, held for jury, in his action for her death as result of being struck by speeding automobile.

14. Automobiles ⚡244(37)—Evidence held to justify jury's finding that proximate cause of child's death was negligent operation of automobile at excessive speed.

Evidence held to justify jury's finding that proximate cause of death of 11 year old girl, struck by automobile while crossing street diagonally five or six feet ahead of her father, after passing to rear of street car, from which they had alighted, was negligent operation of automobile at excessive speed, and that neither deceased nor her father was contributorily negligent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Guiseppe Patania against the Yellow-Checker Cab Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Reisner & Deming, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff in the above action was the father of Paulino Patania, a girl aged 11 years, who was struck and killed by an automobile owned by defendant Yellow-Checker Cab Company, a corporation, and operated by P. M. James, its servant. A jury returned a verdict against the defendants, and from the judgment entered thereon both have appealed. As grounds therefor it is contended that both the plaintiff and his daughter were guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

At about 11 o'clock a. m. on May 20, 1926, the plaintiff and his daughter alighted from the rear exit of a street car which was proceeding north along the east side of Powell street in San Francisco, and which had stopped near the southeast corner of Powell and Greenwich streets to discharge passengers. The street car line is double-tracked and the plaintiff's home, which was his destination, was on the west side of Powell street, between 80 and 100 feet south of the southwest corner of the above streets. The evidence shows that the point where they alighted was approximately the length of the car south of the south property line of Greenwich street; that when the car proceeded both plaintiff and his daughter started from that point to cross to the west curb of Powell street, which was distant about 30 feet. The child, who was walking rapidly, preceded the plaintiff by 5 or 6 feet. Her course was not directly toward the curb, but diverged somewhat to the south toward the residence of the plaintiff. It further appears that the automobile reached the north line of Greenwich street at about the time the street car started, and that after the south line of the street was reached the brakes were applied. According to one witness the automobile was then running at a speed of about 35 miles per hour, and skidded a distance of 47 feet, the end of the skid mark being 75 feet south of the south property line of Greenwich street. When stopped, the machine was partially upon the westerly car track. The plaintiff was returning from a hospital, to which he had been accompanied by his daughter. He was weak and partially paralyzed, and for some months previous had been confined to his bed. According to the plaintiff the automobile was nearly in front of him when he passed the rear of the street car, and as soon as he observed it shouted a warning to the driver.

[1-5] It has been held that an adult, familiar with travel conditions, who alights from a street car in the daytime and, for the purpose of crossing the street, passes to the rear of the car, and before attempting to cross neglects to look for street cars approaching from the opposite direction, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Klusman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 190 Cal. 441, 213 P. 38; Ross v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 39 Cal. App. 658, 179 P. 538. It is the duty of a pedestrian to look before starting to cross a street. Davis v. Breuner Co., 167 Cal. 683, 140 P. 586. But he is not precluded from recovering by reason of the fact that he was crossing between intersections (Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239

P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027; Broedlow v. LeGros, 88 Cal. App. 671, 263 P. 1027, or diagonally; but in either case a greater degree of care must be observed than where an established crosswalk is used (Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493), and the defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in an action by or on behalf of a child, or brought by the parent for damages on account of the child's death, where the latter was of an age sufficient to exercise discretion for the avoidance of injury. A child, however, is not held to the same degree of care as an adult, and is only required to exercise that degree of care which is ordinarily exercised by minors of like age, mental capacity, and discretion. There is no precise age at which as a matter of law a child is to be held accountable for his actions to the same extent as one of full age. The question as to the capacity of a particular child at a particular time to exercise care to avoid a particular danger is one of fact, falling within the province of a jury to determine. Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 P. 712. The rule has been applied in cases where the ages of the children sought to be charged with contributory negligence varied from 12 to 15 years. Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., supra; Bowdoin v. Southern Pacific Co., 178 Cal. 634, 174 P. 664; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 205 P. 1073; Schroeder v. Baumgarteker, 202 Cal. 626, 262 P. 740; Greeneich v. Knoll, 73 Cal. App. 1, 238 P. 163.

[6-10] The trial court, however, is not bound in such cases to submit the question to the jury when no other inference than that of negligence on the part of the child can be drawn from the facts (Studer v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 P. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39); and a finding that the child was guilty of contributory negligence will be upheld where the evidence shows a want of such care to avoid danger as might reasonably be expected from a person of its age and capacity (Opelt v. Al. G. Barnes Co., 41 Cal. App. 776, 183 P. 241; Todd v. Orcutt, 42 Cal. App. 687, 183 P. 963). While in the present case the jury might have concluded from portions of plaintiff's testimony that the deceased failed to look in the direction from which the automobile approached, he also testified that he did not know whether she looked in that direction or not. Notwithstanding any inconsistencies in his testimony his credibility was a question for the jury. Withers v. Massengill, 148 Cal. 769, 84 P. 153; Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 108 P. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. The presumption is that the child was at all times exercising the requisite amount of care for her own safety (Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, subd. 4), and until overcome by proof to the contrary the fact presumed was evidence in accordance with which the jury was bound to decide. Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., supra. The finding was against the plea of contributory negligence, and the evidence was such as to sustain rational differences of opinion on that issue. Even where the facts are undisputed, if different inferences might reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question of negligence is one for the jury. Lewis v. Tanner, 49 Cal. App. 271, 193 P. 287. Under the circumstances shown, the issue was properly submitted to the jury and we cannot say that their conclusion was unsupported.

[11-13] Where a parent sues to recover damages for a child's wrongful death, recovery may not be had if the negligence of the parent proximately contributed thereto. Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co., 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A. L. R. 401; Waterman v. Visalia Electric R. R. Co., 23 Cal. App. 350, 137 P. 1096; Keena v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 57 Cal. App. 124, 207 P. 35. The testimony shows that the child's whole life was spent in the vicinity of the place where she met her death, and that she was intelligent and familiar with street conditions. The record also discloses evidence that she had been warned by her parents of the dangers from approaching vehicles and the necessity for watchfulness in that respect. It was not negligence per se for plaintiff to permit her to cross the street unattended (Metcalf v. Romano, 83 Cal. App. 508, 257 P. 114; Wong Kit v. Crescent Creamery Co., 87 Cal. App. 563, 262 P. 481); and, in view of the physical and mental condition of the plaintiff, the question whether he was lacking in due care under the circumstances was one for the jury.

[14] After a review of the evidence, we are satisfied that the jury was justified in concluding that the proximate cause of the damage was the negligent operation of the automobile, and that neither the plaintiff nor his daughter was guilty of contributory negligence.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. OLIVER et al.*
(Civ. 6571.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Dec. 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 31, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Eminent domain $\S$ 124—Law relating to date of ascertaining value of property taken for street improvement held "retroactive" or "retrospective" (St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8).

St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, relating to date of ascertaining value of property taken for street improvement, held a "retroactive" or "retrospective" law; such terms being used synonymously to denote a law which operates on matters which have occurred or rights or obligations which have existed before time the law went into effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Retrospective Law.]

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 186—Enactment of retrospective law does not violate Constitution unless interfering with some vested right existing before enactment.

Enactment of retrospective laws is not in violation of Constitution, except in so far as elements of retrospective action enters into consideration of constitutionality for purpose of determining whether or not it interferes with some vested right before its enactment or whether it impairs the obligation of a contract.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 92—"Vested right," as used in relation to constitutional guaranties, implies interest proper for state to recognize and of which individual cannot be arbitrarily deprived (Const. art. 1, § 14).

A "vested right," as that term is used in relation to constitutional guaranties, implies an interest which it is proper for state to recognize and protect, and of which individual could not be deprived arbitrarily without injustice, so that in exercise of right of eminent domain the right vested in individual owner of property is that his property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation in accordance with Const. art. 1, § 14.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Vested Right.]

4. Eminent domain $\S$ 122—"Just compensation" required to be paid for land taken means value of land taken and damage to land not taken by reason of severance (Const. art. 1, § 14).

Phrase "just compensation," as used in Const. art. 1, § 14, denying right to take property without just compensation, means value of land taken and damage if any to land not taken, value of which has been diminished by reason of severance therefrom of original parcel; the adjective "just" only emphasizing what would be true if omitted, namely, that compensation should be equivalent of property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Just Compensation.]

5. Constitutional law $\S$ 106—Procedure by which compensation is to be ascertained for property taken is not right guaranteed by Constitution and vested in property owner.

Procedure by which amount of compensation to owner of property taken is to be ascertained and determined is not within or portion of right guaranteed by Constitution, and therefore vested in property owner.

6. Constitutional law $\S$ 106—Fixing of date to ascertain value is matter or procedure not within constitutional right to receive just compensation for property taken for public purposes.

Fixing of some particular date as of which value shall be ascertained is a matter of procedure and not included within constitutionally guaranteed right to receive just compensation for property taken or damaged for public purposes.

7. Constitutional law $\S$ 106—Legislature may change procedure or remedies and make changes applicable to pending actions, unless vested rights are destroyed or obligations of contracts impaired.

Legislature may change rules of procedure or remedies, and such changes may be made applicable to pending actions, provided that under the guise of a mere change of procedure or substitution of remedy vested rights are not destroyed or obligations of contracts impaired, and so long as a reasonably efficient remedy remains.

8. Statutes $\S$ 267(1)—Rights of action will be enforceable under new procedure without regard to time accrual, where law only affects remedy or procedure, unless there is saving clause.

When a law affects only remedy or procedure, all rights of action will be enforceable under new procedure without regard to whether they accrued before or after such change in the law and without regard to whether suit had been instituted or not, unless there is a saving clause as to existing litigations.

9. Constitutional law $\S$ 106—Right of Legislature to change rules of procedure or remedies applies in proceedings in eminent domain.

Right of Legislature to change rules of procedure or remedies without destroying vested rights or impairing obligations of contract apply in proceedings in eminent domain as well as in those of a different nature; it being established that, in the absence of any provision in organic law prescribing a contrary course, the mode of exercising right of eminent domain is within discretion of Legislature.

10. Constitutional law $\S$ 106—Power of Legislature to fix time for ascertaining value of property taken for public purposes is continuing one.

Power of Legislature to fix time for ascertaining value of property taken for public purposes is a continuing one, and original exercise of it neither exhausts it nor affects right to change the time first fixed as often as to legislative will may seem expedient.

11. Constitutional law ☞106—Property owner's right to just compensation does not include right to have compensation ascertained in any particular mode or at any particular time.

Right vested by Constitution in owner of property to receive just compensation for the taking thereof does not include the right to have that compensation ascertained and assessed in any particular mode or as of any particular time.

12. Constitutional law ☞106—Law changing date for ascertaining value of property taken for public purposes related merely to procedure and is applicable to pending actions (St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending Street Opening Act 1903, § 10).

St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending the Street Opening Act 1903, § 10, changing the date as of which value of property taken for public purposes was to be ascertained, related merely to procedure which it was within power of Legislature to make applicable to pending actions.

13. Appeal and error ☞1056(2)—Rejecting offer to prove irrelevant or immaterial evidence is not error.

Where evidence if admitted would have been irrelevant or material, there was no error in rejecting an offer of proof.

14. Statutes ☞74(1)—Law changing date for ascertaining value of property taken did not violate constitutional provision requiring laws of general nature to have uniform operation (St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending Street Opening Act 1903, § 10; Const. art. 1, § 11; Code Civ. Proc. § 1249).

St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending Street Opening Act 1903, § 10, held not in violation of Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation by reason of fact that date for ascertaining value of property taken for public purposes differed from that fixed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, on the same subject of compensation, since the amendment operates uniformly on all persons whose property is sought to be acquired under its provisions.

15. Statutes ☞74(2)—Legislature may classify subjects either of regulation or of procedure and enact laws applicable to all within same class (Const. art. 1, § 11).

Legislature may without violating Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation, classify subjects either of regulation or of procedure and enact laws applicable to all within the same class, provided that such laws apply equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction.

16. Statutes ☞94(2)—Laws relating to acquisition of property for public improvements are general laws relating to all persons in class founded on sufficient legal distinction.

Laws relating to acquisition of private property by municipal corporations for public improvements, and prescribing the manner in which right of eminent domain shall be exercised by such municipalities as well as procedure to be followed in actions to enforce that right, are to be regarded as general laws relating to all persons in same class founded upon a sufficient legal distinction.

17. Constitutional law ☞251—"Due process of law," as applied to judicial proceeding, imports orderly proceeding with right to enforce and protect rights.

Phrase "due process of law," as applied to judicial proceeding, imports an orderly proceeding adapted to nature of case, in which person is accorded an opportunity to be heard and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights, and has the same meaning as expression "by the law of the land" as used in Magna Charta.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Due Process of Law.]

18. Constitutional law ☞315—That property owner was dissatisfied with ruling of tribunal in proceeding for taking of property does not justify contention that he was deprived of due process (Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Where property owner received notice of every step in proceeding for the taking of property for public improvement and was given every opportunity to present his side of the case to an impartial tribunal, the fact that he was dissatisfied with ruling of tribunal in matters of law does not justify contention that he was deprived of due process of law in violation of Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

19. Motions ☞64—Order made in course of action is binding on litigants and court so long as it has not been set aside (Code Civ. Proc. § 1003).

An order defined under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, as every direction of court or judge, made or entered in writing and not included in judgment which has been made in course of an action, is binding on litigants and court alike so long as it has not been set aside.

20. Courts ☞99(1)—Ruling that amendment changing date of ascertaining value of property taken for public improvement did not apply to pending actions was not binding on another judge hearing referee's report (St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending Street Opening Act 1903, § 10).

Ruling of judge that St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8, amending Street Opening Act of 1903, § 10, and changing date of ascertaining value of property taken for public improvements, did not apply to pending actions, was not binding upon another judge at subsequent hearing of referee's report and exceptions thereto, since if such judge is convinced that ruling was erroneous, it was not only his right but his duty to reverse such ruling.

21. Municipal corporations ☞79—Los Angeles City Charter provision relative to street improvement prevails over general improvement law (Street Opening Act of 1903; Los Angeles City Charter, art. 3, § 37; Const. art. 11, § 6).

Authority of city of Los Angeles to open and widen street was not derived from the Street

Opening Act of 1903, but from City Charter, art. 3, § 37 (St. 1925, p. 1045), the provisions of which are supreme and supersede all general laws inconsistent therewith as to such matters as Constitution has authorized to be provided for in freeholders' charters, among which matters are those falling under the designation "municipal affairs" in Const. art. 11, § 6, and in a case of a conflict between a charter provision and general improvement law the provisions of charter will prevail.

22. Municipal corporations ⇨306—Ordinance of intention for street improvement was not invalid for failure to designate fund for payment of portion of expense (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 3, § 37).

Ordinance of intention for street improvement in the city of Los Angeles was not invalid by reason of failure to designate fund from which portion of expenses to be borne by city was to be paid, there being no requirements in City Charter, art. 3, § 37 (St. 1925, pp. 1024, 1045) for such designation.

23. Municipal corporations ⇨288(1)—Order that payment for street improvement be out of city treasury is tantamount to order for payment from general fund.

An order that payment of portion of expense for street improvement to be borne by city be out of the treasury of such city is tantamount to an order that it be paid from the general fund.

24. Municipal corporations ⇨111(4)—Void section of ordinance for street improvement which could be eliminated and still leave workable and enforceable ordinance will be disregarded.

In case section of ordinance of intention for street improvement was void by reason of attempt to appropriate sum less than whole cost of improvement, such section will be disregarded and remainder of enactment given full force, since void portion could be eliminated and still leave a workable and enforceable ordinance.

25. Municipal corporations ⇨288(1)—Provisions of charter authorizing council to appropriate the whole but not a portion of the cost of public improvement was not mandatory (Los Angeles City Charter, art. 3, § 37).

Provision of Los Angeles City Charter, art. 3, § 37 (St. 1925, p. 1045), authorizing council to appropriate the whole but not a portion of cost of public improvement, was permissive and not mandatory.

26. Statutes ⇨225—Court has duty of so construing general law and city charter dealing with same general subject-matter as though they were one act.

It is duty of court to construe both general law and city charter, in so far as they deal with the same general subject-matter, as though they were but one act, each referring to and supplementing the other, harmonizing them so far as possible so as to give force to each without destroying the meaning or intent of the other.

27. Eminent domain ⇨255—Property owner filing answer in condemnation proceedings could not object for first time on appeal to order setting cause for trial (Street Opening Act 1903, § 8, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1145, § 6).

Where property owner filed answer in condemnation proceeding more than seven months before order setting case was made and was served with notice of motion to set without objection, he cannot be heard to object for the first time on appeal that order setting the cause for trial and appointing referees was violative of Street Opening Act of 1903, § 8, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1145, § 6.

28. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Any error in condemnation proceeding in setting case for trial was harmless as respected property owner filing answer theretofore (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Any error in trial of condemnation proceeding in setting case for trial before oral answers were in and all defaults entered held, as respected property owner filing answer more than seven months before order setting the case, to be harmless within Const. art. 6, § 4½.

29. Eminent domain ⇨122—Damage to one defendant in condemnation proceeding does not depend on damage to others.

Damage to one defendant in proceeding in eminent domain will in no particular depend upon damage to others, since neither party is interested in any allowance for damages except his own.

30. Stipulations ⇨3—Parties to action in eminent domain may stipulate as to fact of value.

Parties to an action in eminent domain may stipulate as to the fact of value as well as to any other fact, just as they may do in any other type of action; such stipulations being regarded by court as establishing facts stipulated and as taking the place of evidence with regard thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Condemnation proceeding by the City of Los Angeles against J. G. Oliver, Leonard J. Woodruff, and others. From an interlocutory judgment of condemnation, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Coleman and Ed. Fitzpatrick, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., and Arthur W. Nordstrom and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputies City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. The appellant is one of several hundred defendants in an action brought by the city of Los Angeles for the purpose of condemning some 370 separate parcels of land, one of which is owned by him, for the widening of existing streets and the opening of new streets in that city. The proceedings were taken and the action instituted under the provisions of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376, and acts amendatory thereof). Appellant makes no complaint as to the regularity or validity of any of the proceedings prior to the commencement of the action. His appeal is from the interlocutory judgment of condemnation therein.

Inasmuch as several of the numerous points on which appellant relies for a reversal relate to and involve the time at which certain of the various steps in the action were taken, it may be well at the outset to give a chronological history of the case in so far at least as is material to the questions presented for our determination.

Complaint was filed and summons issued August 6, 1926; appellant's answer was filed December 7, 1926; and the order appointing referees and setting the case for trial as to those defendants who had demanded jury trials was made July 30, 1927. Four answers were filed and several defaults entered subsequent to the last-mentioned date. The trial as to those parcels of land the owners of which had demanded jury trials was set for December 5, 1927. Appellant was not one of these, he having waived trial by court or jury; so that as to parcel 141, owned by him, the hearing was before three referees, appointed as aforesaid, and was held in September, 1927. On July 29, 1927, an amendment to the Street Opening Act of 1903 went into effect, relating to the time as of which the value of land taken or damaged should be ascertained. The referees' report was filed April 12, 1928, and on May 11 the hearing on said report was set for June 4, 1928. Appellant filed his exceptions to the referees' report on May 31. On May 24, 1928, the jury trial, as to the parcels the owners of which had demanded such trial, was had before Judge Keetch; it having been continued to that date from the time originally set. The hearing of appellant's exceptions to the report of the referees was had on July 16 and 17, 1928, before Judge Shaw. July 16 an interlocutory judgment as to the parcels involved in the jury trial was signed by Judge Keetch. On November 28, 1928, Judge Shaw signed and there was entered the interlocutory judgment with respect to those parcels as to which the trial had been before the referees, confirming the referees' report as to the compensation awarded appellant as the owner of parcel 141 and, as to the parcels of others who had filed exceptions, modifying it as to some and confirming it as to others. Thereafter and within due time appellant moved for a new trial. There appears to have been no ruling on this motion, so that under the provisions of section 660, Code of Civil Procedure, it is deemed to have been denied. Thereafter this appeal was perfected.

Appellant urges many grounds for reversal, most of them having to do with what we believe to be the most important question presented on this appeal, namely, the constitutionality of the amendment to the Street Opening Act of 1903 above referred to, as applied to actions pending at the time it went into effect.

At the time the proceedings were instituted which culminated in the condemnation suit, and at the time that action was commenced and summons was served upon appellant, section 10 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 stood as follows: "For the purpose of assessing the compensation and damages, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the issuance of summons, and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken, but injuriously affected, in all cases where such damages are allowed by the provisions of this act, provided, that in any case in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of trial." St. 1925, p. 242, § 4. At its session in 1927, the Legislature enacted a statute amending the title and several sections of the Street Opening Act, which amendatory statute, as we have noted, went into effect July 29, 1927, and after the instant case had been set for trial. The only portions of this 1927 law with which we are here concerned are those amending section 10 above set forth and those relating to the effect of such amendment as to pending proceedings. Section 10 was amended only as to that portion which we have italicized, the portion preceding the word "provided" being left as it was before the amendment. As so amended the latter portion of the section was made to read: "* * * Provided, that in any case where a motion to set the action for trial, as provided in section 8 of this act, is not made within one year after the date of the issuance of the summons therein, the right to compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the hearing of the motion to set the action for trial." St. 1927, p. 1146, § 8. The last section of the amendatory act of 1927 is as follows: "Any proceeding or action for any improvement, such as is provided for in this act, or in said act to which this act is amendatory, already commenced and pending at the time this act takes effect, under or by virtue of any ordinance of intention theretofore passed, shall, from the stage of any such proceeding or action already commenced and in progress at the time this act takes effect, be continued under the provisions of this act and it shall not be necessary to renew or conduct over again any such proceedings or actions, commenced prior to the taking effect of this act and all steps taken by the legislative body of any city in any such proceedings and any and all acts done and performed therein by any officer or officers of any city, or any and all acts done or steps taken by any other officer or officers in connection therewith, and such proceedings, are hereby validated, ratified, legalized and confirmed." St. 1927, p. 1147, § 10.

There can be no question but that the Legislature intended to make the amendments of 1927 applicable to pending matters. The last-quoted section makes that clear beyond reasonable controversy. Appellant earnestly contends, however, that it had no power to do this, because the Constitutions, state and national, guaranteed him the right to just compensation upon the taking of his property for public purposes, and he had a vested right to have the amount of that compensation ascertained in the manner and as of the time specified by the law as it stood when the action was commenced, namely, as of the date of the trial, and that the ascertainment of the value of his property as of the date of the issuance of summons operated to deprive him of a substantial part of the just compensation to which he was entitled under the constitutional guaranties and thus deprived him of vested rights. In this connection it must be borne in mind that while the trial as to appellant's land was had more than one year after the commencement of the action, the order setting the case for trial was made before the expiration of the year. If therefore the amendment of 1927 to section 10 of the Street Opening Act was constitutional and applicable to pending actions, the date as of which value was to be ascertained and compensation awarded was August 6, 1926, that being the date of issuance of the summons; while if the amendment was unconstitutional as applied to pending actions and the case should have been tried under the statute as it stood when the complaint was filed, the proper date was some 23 months later.

Upon this question of the applicability of the 1927 amendment to the pending action two able and learned judges have disagreed. Judge Keetch, presiding at the jury trial, in which appellant's land was not involved, ruled, and instructed the jury, that the date as of which the value of the land taken and the amount of severance damages was to be ascertained was the date of the trial; Judge Shaw, before whom was heard the referees' report and the exceptions thereto, ruled that the date to be considered for this purpose was the date of issuance of summons in the action. Appellant bases one of the points upon which he relies for a reversal, to which we shall later advert, upon the conflicting rulings of these two able trial judges.

[1, 2] There is no question but that the statute of 1927 is, as far as this case is concerned, a retroactive or retrospective law. These terms are used synonymously (Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207; Gray v. Toledo, 80 Ohio St. 445, 89 N. E. 12) to denote a law which operates on matters which have occurred, or rights or obligations which existed, before the time the law went into effect (Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 761, 103 P. 199; People v. Allied Architects Ass'n, 201 Cal. 428, 436, 257 P. 511). While the Constitutions of some of the states forbid the enactment of retrospective laws (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations [8th Ed.] p. 773), our own contains no such inhibition, nor is there any provision of the United States Constitution that prohibits a state from passing laws of this nature. In Baltimore & Susquehanna R. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. 395, 401, 13 L. Ed. 469, the United States Supreme Court said: "That there exists a general power in the State governments to enact retrospective or retroactive laws, is a point too well settled to admit of question at this day. The only limit upon this power in the States by the Federal Constitution, and therefore the only source of cognizance or control with respect to that power existing in this court, is the provision that these retrospective laws shall not be such as are technically ex post facto, or such as impair the obligation of contracts." In the earlier case of Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 110, 8 L. Ed. 876, the same court had held: "It is clear, that this court has no right to pronounce an act of the state legislature void, as contrary to the constitution of the United States, from the mere fact that it divests antecedent vested rights of property. The constitution of the United States does not prohibit the states from passing retrospective law, generally; but only ex post facto laws. Now, it has been solemnly settled by this court, that the phrase, ex post facto * * * is not applicable to civil laws, but to penal and criminal laws."

In California it has been held that "it is no objection to the validity of a statute to say that it is retrospective in its operation." Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 P. 48, 49. See, also, Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 55; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 P. 352, and Craycroft v. Superior Court, 18 Cal. App. 781, 124 P. 1042. As to such a law the element of its retrospective action enters into the consideration of its constitutionality only for the purpose of determining whether or not it interferes with some right vested before its enactment or whether it impairs the obligation of a contract. As said in Galland v. Lewis, 26 Cal. 46: "In all the cases where laws confessedly retrospective, have been declared void, it has been upon the ground that such laws were in conflict with some vested right, secured either by some constitutional guarantee or protected by the principles of universal justice." Again, in Pignaz v. Bur- nett, supra, following the statement above quoted from that case the court said: "The question is, Is the amendment an ex post facto law, or does it impair the obligation of contracts? and also, perhaps, whether it deprives any one of vested rights. If it does none of these things, it is no objection to it that it applies to pending cases or past transactions." In the present case the only one of these questions with which we are at all concerned is that relating to vested rights, this being a civil action and the element of contract not being involved.

[3-6] A "vested right," as that term is used in relation to constitutional guaranties, implies an interest "which it is proper for the state to recognize and protect, and of which the individual could not be deprived arbitrarily without injustice." 6 R. C. L. 308; Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 6 S. Ct. 209, 29 L. Ed. 483. Thus it may be said that so far as the exercise of the right of eminent domain is concerned the right vested in the individual owner of property is that his property "shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for, the owner. * * *" Section 14, art. 1, Const. of California. The phrase "just compensation" means the value of the land taken and the damage, if any, to land not taken, but the value of which has been diminished by reason of the severance therefrom of the parcel taken. More than this it does not imply. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Chubb, 24 Cal. App. 265, 141 P. 36. "The adjective 'just' only emphasizes what would be true if omitted—namely, that the compensation should be equivalent of the property" Monongahela Navigation Company v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 13 S. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463. Beyond providing that this compensation "shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived," as it was by appellant in the instant case, the Constitution contains no provisions as to the procedure by which the amount of the compensation—the value of the land taken—is to be established. Consequently, "the procedure by which this just compensation is to be ascertained is as much the subject of statutory law as is the procedure by which the property is to be taken. There is no way to exercise the right of eminent domain except as prescribed by statute, and there is no way for the property owner to secure just compensation for his property except by statute law." Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Chubb, supra. It would thus appear that the procedure by which the amount of compensation is to be ascertained and determined is not within, or a portion of, the right, guaranteed by the Constitution and therefore vested in the property owner. That the fixing of some particular date as of which values shall be ascertained is a matter of procedure would seem self-evident. As said in City of Pasadena v.

Porter, 201 Cal. 381, 257 P. 526, 530, 53 A. L. R. 679: "It is necessary, for the purpose of assessing compensation and damages in eminent domain proceedings, that the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at a fixed date." Or, to state it in a slightly different manner, "the value of the property at some period antedating the judgment could alone be awarded to the owner, because the award must be made by the judgment." California Southern R. R. Co. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90. The Legislature, in providing a method of procedure for the ascertainment of the compensation guaranteed by the Constitution, has seen fit to designate the date of the issuance of the summons as the date as of which such compensation shall be ascertained in actions instituted under the Street Opening Act of 1903—subject to the provisos contained in section 10 of that act as it stood at the time this action was commenced and as thereafter amended. It might with equal authority have designated for that purpose the date of the filing of the last answer to be filed, or any other date between that of the commencement of the action and the rendition of a judgment therein. It has frequently been held that the fixing of a particular date as a time basis for the estimation of property values in condemnation suits is not a legislative interference with the right to just compensation guaranteed by the Constitution—which is but another way of stating that there is no vested right to have compensation assessed as of any particular date. Thus, in California Southern R. R. Co. v. Kimball, supra, it was contended that the Code provision relating to proceedings in eminent domain in general and fixing the date as of which compensation was to be ascertained as the date of issuance of the summons (section 1249, Code Civ. Proc.) was in conflict with the constitutional guaranty as to just compensation, and that the value should be fixed as of the time of the actual taking. Rejecting this contention the court said: "And the Constitution simply means that the compensation awarded in the manner prescribed by law shall be paid to the owner before his property shall be taken for public use." This decision has been referred to with approval in a number of later cases. Tehama County v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57, 8 P. 673; San Jose, etc., R. R. Co. v. Mayne, 83 Cal. 566, 23 P. 522; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 P. 585; Sacramento Terminal Co. v. McDougall, 19 Cal. App. 562, 126 P. 503; Marin Municipal Water District v. Marin Water & Power Co., 178 Cal. 308, 173 P. 469, 471. In the case last cited it was urged that the provisions of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 42), relating to condemnation, were unconstitutional. Construing the section and answering this contention the court said: "The effect of section 47 is to provide a scheme for the condemnation of property by the public corporations mentioned therein, by a proceeding wherein the value is to be fixed by the Railroad Commission, and the right and power of such public corporation to condemn the property is to be determined by the superior court. The enforcement thereof is also given over to the superior court. The appellant contends that if it shall be construed to provide for the taking of the property at the time of the judgment in the superior court, upon payment of the value previously fixed by the commission, it would be unconstitutional. The argument is that the owner is entitled to the value of the property at the time it is taken, and that he cannot be deprived thereof for public use, upon payment as compensation of the value fixed at a previous time, unless it shall appear that there has been no increase in value up to the time it is taken. So far as the provisions of the Constitution of California are concerned, the proposition is without merit. * * * Nor is the enactment, we think, violative of the clauses of the federal Constitution prohibiting a state from depriving a person of his property without due process of law, or denying him the equal protection of the laws. It is not to be doubted that, irrespective of any more specific requirements in state Constitutions, the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires compensation to be made or secured to the owner of private property taken by authority of the state for public use. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 S. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979. But section 47 of the Public Utilities Act provides in express terms for the ascertainment, and the payment to the owner, of 'just compensation' for property taken. It is contended that the scheme of valuation is not fair to the owners of public utilities, in that the value is fixed as of the time of the hearing by the Railroad Commission, which must precede the commencement of the formal condemnation suit. Under the general law relative to eminent domain, the value of property taken is assessed as of the date of the issuance of summons. Code Civ. Proc. § 1249. It is settled by our decisions that this rule, the equivalent of which is found in many other states (15 Cyc. 721), involves no violation of constitutional right. (Citing cases.) On analysis, it will be found that the distinction between the Code provisions and those of the Public Utilities Act is formal rather than substantial. Section 47 creates a special proceeding in eminent domain. The ascertainment of value by the railroad commission and the subsequent action in the superior court, in which the previous finding of value is made conclusive, are both parts of that proceeding. The hearing by the commission on the question of value is merely a step in the litigation prosecuted to enforce the right of eminent domain. In effect, therefore, the value is fixed as of the date of the institution of the condemnation proceeding, as it is in cases prosecuted under the Code sections alone." (Italics ours.)

In City of Pasadena v. Porter, supra, a similar point was raised as to the very section of the Street Opening Act of 1903 involved in this case. That section as it then stood read: "For the purpose of assessing the compensation and damages, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the order appointing referees or of the order setting the cause for trial, as the case may be. * * * St. 1909, p. 1038, § 5. Examination of the transcript in the case cited discloses that the complaint was filed and summons issued July 11, 1924, that the order appointing referees was made January 23, 1925, and that the hearing of the referees' report and the exceptions thereto was had July 20, 1925. The chief bone of contention was the allocation of the compensation as between the owner of the fee in certain land taken and the owner's lessee. Both the referees and the court had, at the respective hearings, accepted January 23, 1925, as the date from which damages should be computed. The appellant owner contended "that the damages awarded the tenant should date only from the time of the actual loss of possession by the tenant" and that the amount awarded the tenant was excessive "because it includes an allowance for account of rent for a period between the date of the appointment of the referees and the date of the final decree, or the date when the tenant will lose possession, during all of which period the Gekco Company has had, and will retain, the possession, use, and enjoyment of the entire premises. Such a proceeding, she asserts, amounts to a violation of article 1, § 14, of the state Constitution, which provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner." Answering this argument the court in that case said: "There is no merit in the contention. It is necessary, for the purpose of assessing compensation and damages in eminent domain proceedings, that the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at a fixed date. Under the general law relative to eminent domain, the value of property taken is assessed as of the date of the issuance of the summons. Code Civ. Proc. § 1249. It is settled by the decisions that this rule, the equivalent of which is found in many states, involves no violation of constitutional right. California Southern R. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Marin W. & P. Co., 178 Cal. 308, 314, 173 P. 469, and cases cited. On analysis, it will be found that the distinction between the provision of the Code section and that of the Street Opening Act, supra, is formal, rather than substantial, as it was held to be between the Code section and the provisions of the Public Utilities Act considered in the cases just cited."

It seems clear to us that the foregoing authorities amply sustain the proposition that the constitutionally guaranteed right to receive just compensation for property taken or damaged for public purposes neither includes nor implies the right to have such compensation ascertained by any particular procedure or as of any certain date.

[7, 8] It is a well-settled rule of law that the Legislature may change rules of procedure, or remedies, and that such changes may be made applicable to pending actions, provided, of course, that under the guise of a mere change of procedure or substitution of remedies vested rights are not destroyed or the obligation of contracts impaired (Buck v. Canty, 162 Cal. 226, 121 P. 924; Aikins v. Kingsbury, 170 Cal. 674, 151 P. 145; Bassford v. Earl, 172 Cal. 653, 158 P. 124), and so long as a reasonably efficient remedy remains (Mill and Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 80, 24 P. 648; Lantz v. Fishburn, 17 Cal. App. 583, 120 P. 1068). As said by Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, "The bringing of suit vests in a party no right to a particular decision." Cooley, Const. Lim. (8th Ed.) p. 789. When a law only affects the remedy or procedure, "all rights of action will be enforceable under the new procedure, without regard to whether they accrued before or after such change in the law and without regard to whether the suit had been instituted or not, unless there is a saving clause as to existing litigation." People ex rel. Foote v. Clark, 283 Ill. 221, 119 N. E. 329.

[9] These principles apply in proceedings in eminent domain as well as in those of a different nature. As said in Secombe v. Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. Co., 23 Wall. 108, 117, 23 L. Ed. 67: "It is no longer an open question in this country that the mode of exercising the right of eminent domain, in the absence of any provision in the organic law prescribing a contrary course, is within the discretion of the Legislature." (Italics ours.) The same principle is thus enunciated in Springfield, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hall, 67 Ill. 99: "The State has the right to say on what terms it will allow its right of eminent domain to be exercised, so long as anything remains to be done by the corporation in order to complete the condemnation of the land." And as held in St. Joseph, etc., R. R. Co. v. Shambaugh, 106 Mo. 557, 17 S. W. 581, it is competent for the Legislature to change the method or procedure to be used in assessing damages for condemnation as to pending actions. "The rule of law upon this subject is, that whatever belongs merely to the remedy, adapted for the acquisition of a right, may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of a contract; and such result is not worked where a substantial remedy is left to the parties according to the ordinary course of justice." Long's Appeal, 87 Pa. 114. The appellant in that case was the owner of land sought to be condemned by a railroad company, under the power of eminent domain delegated to it by the state. The law at the time the proceedings were commenced provided for the ascertainment of compensation by "viewers," no right of appeal from their report being given to either party. Prior to the hearing as to value a new law went into effect which gave either party a right of appeal from the assessment of the viewers. Long took such appeal, and on motion of the railroad company it was "struck off," or as we would say in this state, dismissed, and from the decree of dismissal Long appealed to the Supreme Court. We again quote from the opinion: "Here, then, we have the two rights clearly defined and recognized; the company's right to take the property of the citizen and the citizen's right to compensation. What remains is but a question of remedy. If the parties cannot agree upon the value of the property taken, some means must be provided by which it can be ascertained, and the owner must have some method by which he may enforce payment. The remedy is to be found in the 4th section of the Act of March 27th, 1848. [The procedure for ascertainment of damages, as above set forth, is here described.] * * * This, then, is the remedy prescribed, the means to be used in order to secure to the owner the value of his property. It is, however, but a remedy, and it neither enlarges nor abridges the rights vested in either party. Such being the case, we cannot see why the lawmaking power may not only amend the present remedy, but even substitute a new one, provided there be no interference with the company's franchise or the citizen's right." (Italics ours.)

To a similar effect is the decision in Title Insurance & Trust Company v. Lusk et al., 15 Cal. App. 358, 115 P. 53, 54. There the proceedings were for the widening of a street under the same act involved in this case. The condemnation action was commenced in 1907, and the interlocutory judgment awarding compensation for property taken and damaged was entered in January of 1910. Thereafter, in conformity with the procedure provided in the act, an assessment on the property declared to be benefited by the improvement was prepared and filed with the clerk of the city council, to which assessment protests were filed by certain of the owners of the property assessed to pay for the cost of the improvement, including, of course, the damages awarded. November 15, 1910, these protests were sustained by the council, but that body failed and refused to either confirm, modify, or correct the assessment or to order a new assessment, but instead directed the preparation of an ordinance abandoning the proceedings. At the time the condemnation suit was commenced, the act of 1903 permitted the city to abandon the proceedings by ordinance and to dismiss the action without prejudice at any time prior to the payment of the compensation awarded to the defendant property owners, but in 1909 section 14, containing this provision, was amended so as to provide that the city council might at any time prior to the entry of the interlocutory judgment abandon the proceedings and cause the action to be dismissed. St. 1909, p. 1040, § 8. Section 11 of the amendatory act of 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1042) provided that it should apply to pending proceedings and actions thereunder. Certain of the property owners, defendants in the condemnation action, applied to this court for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents, as members of and composing the city council, to proceed and confirm, correct, or modify the assessment, or order a new assessment; their position being that as the interlocutory judgment had been entered the council had lost jurisdiction to abandon the proceedings and that its plain duty under the law was to act upon the assessment. On the other hand, it was argued that the provisions of the act as it stood at the time the action was commenced governed, and hence that the right to abandon could be exercised at any time before the compensation awarded in the interlocutory judgment was paid, and that the application of the 1909 amendment would operate to impair a vested right. The court held: "This section affects a remedy as distinguished from a right. 'Remedies must always be under the control of the Legislature' * * * and where a reasonable remedy is provided it is immaterial that it alters one previously existing."

[10] A consideration of the authorities just passed in review, and especially those immediately preceding the one last noted, inspires a somewhat different but closely related view of the point now under scrutiny. The Constitution provides for the taking of private property for public use upon the rendition of just compensation. It is not worth while to cite authority for the practically self-evident statement that the moment when, in a long chain of proceedings, the taking is deemed actually to occur is necessarily a matter for legislative determination. Now it is plain that a declaration that the value of the property to be taken is to be ascertained as of a certain time is practically equivalent to a statement that the time named is that upon which the taking is to be deemed to have occurred. Again, if the Legislature is to fix the time of taking, it is evident that the power is a continuing one and that an original exercise of it neither exhausts it nor affects the right to change the time first fixed as often as to the legislative will may seem expedient. Therefore, if the Legislature fixes the time of taking, in effect, by determining the period at which, during the long chain of proceedings, the value of the property to be taken is to be ascertained, that body may change at its will the designation of the moment as of which the value is to be ascertained, without a deprivation of the various constitutional guaranties above mentioned. So much seems to have been settled by the authorities to which we have above referred.

[11, 12] We have discussed at some length the constitutional question which enters into a number of the points raised by appellant for the reason that this is a case of first impression in this state and, as far as we have been able to discover, elsewhere. Our conclusion is that the right vested by the Constitution in the owner of property to receive just compensation upon the taking thereof does not include the right to have that compensation ascertained and assessed in any particular mode or as of any particular time, and that the amendment affecting the date as of which the value of appellant's land was to be ascertained was one relating merely to procedure which it was within the power of the Legislature to make applicable to pending actions.

[13] Our ruling on the point just discussed is, of course, determinative of appellant's contentions that the court below erred in overruling his objection to the hearing of the referees' report for the reason that the value of his property was fixed therein as of the date of the issuance of the summons and in its rulings on certain objections to evidence as to value, which objections were based on appellant's theory as to the unconstitutionality of the 1927 amendment, as well as his claim that the court erred in rejecting his offer to prove the value of the land as of the date of the hearing of the exceptions. As to the last-mentioned point it suffices to say that there can be no error in rejecting an offer to prove where the evidence if admitted would have been irrelevant or immaterial (Logan v. McMullen, 4 Cal. App. 154, 87 P. 285), and since, as we have held, the amendment of 1927 to section 10 was applicable, the value of appellant's property at a time subsequent to that of the issuance of the summons was immaterial.

[14, 15] Appellant further contends that section 10 of the act in question violates section 11, article 1, of the state Constitution, which requires that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." His position as to this contention is thus stated in his opening brief on this appeal: "The provisions of the 1927 amendment of 1903 act conflict with section 1249, C. C. P. on the same subject of just compensation, in this, the 1927 amendment provides that the date of value shall be as of issuance of summons, provided, that the motion to set the case for trial is not made within one year after issuance of summons, and in that case then the date of value shall be for all parties as of that date only, that is, the date of hearing the motion to set the action for trial. While under section 1249, Code Civ. Proc., there may be various dates, that is, there may be a new date upon the trial of each parcel tried separately by the court or by the referees. That with the two statutes as they now stand a person who should be named in a proceeding under 1903 act is restricted to either date of summons or of date of motion to set case for trial. While persons that may be named in proceedings commenced under the general law may have their values fixed as of date of summons or as of date of trial. Therefore, the laws prescribed for fixing date of value for just compensation cannot operate uniformly on all persons in the same category, and upon rights and things in the same relation for that, those named under the general law are entitled to various dates depending upon time when their trials would be heard." There is no merit in this contention. The section as amended operates uniformly upon all persons whose property is sought to be acquired under the provisions of, and for the purposes stated in, the Street Opening Act of 1903, and upon the property of such persons. The Legislature may, without violating the constitutional provision above quoted, classify subjects either of regulation or of procedure and enact laws applicable to all within the same class, provided of course that such laws apply "equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction" and do not confer "peculiar disabilities or burdensome conditions in the exercise of a common right, upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from the general body of those who stand in precisely the same relation to the subject of the law." City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 251, 27 P. 604, 607. As said in Matter of Stoltenberg, 165 Cal. 789, 792, 134 P. 971, 972: "It needs no argument, of course, to show that, while constitutional provisions prohibit arbitrary discrimination in favor of or against selected individuals or groups, it is within the legislative power to classify subjects of regulation, and to pass laws applicable to all of a class (In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 P. 955), provided that the classification so made be founded upon some reasonable, intrinsic basis of differentiation." Again, quoting from Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 262, 82 P. 956, 958, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475: "A law which applies alike to all the subjects upon which it acts, or, in other words, a law which applies equally to all persons or things within a legitimate class to which, alone, it is addressed, does not violate the provision requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation, and is neither local nor special." And as said in Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 147, 44 P. 915, 918: "It has been uniformly held that a law is general which applies to all of a class, the classification being a proper one, and that the requirement of uniformity is satisfied if it applies to all of the class alike." To the same effect are the decisions in Ex parte Halsted, 89 Cal. 472, 26 P. 961; Cody v. Murphey, 89 Cal. 524, 26 P. 1081; Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 230, 24 P. 383; Summerland v. Bicknell, 111 Cal. 569, 44 P. 232, and Johnson v. Gunn, 148 Cal. 745, 84 P. 665. "Procedure may not be said to be special because it is peculiar to the character of the action with reference to which it is prescribed." Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Lusk, supra; People ex rel. Swindell v. City of Los Angeles (Cal. App.) 269 P. 934.

One of the objections urged against the constitutionality of the Public Utilities Act in Marin Municipal Water District v. Marin Water, etc., Co., supra, was based upon an alleged discrimination between the mode of condemning property under the general law and that provided by section 47 of the act for condemning the property of public utilities in certain cases. Answering this objection, the Supreme Court said: "None of these discriminations, as we have seen, goes to any matter of essential justice or fundamental right. The constitutional provision under consideration does not prohibit a state from establishing different rules of procedure for different classes of cases or of litigants, provided the variations relate merely to matters of procedure, and do not operate to deprive any class of substantial equality in the adjudication of its rights or liabilities. 12 C. J. 948; Cin. St. Ry. Co. v. Snell, 193 U. S. 30, 24 S. Ct. 319, 48 L. Ed. 604; Cook v. Ray Mfg. Co., 159 Cal. 694, 115 P. 318. In condemnation proceedings, so long as the state provides a fair and equitable judicial inquiry, in which the parties interested are allowed to be heard and present evidence, and are protected in their right to have just compensation, they are not deprived of the equal protection of the laws because the state, under authority of its own Constitution, has seen fit to provide for other classes of cases a different method or a different tribunal for accomplishing the same result. Railroad Co. v. Tel. Co., 65 S. C. 459, 43 S. E. 970; Kennebec Water D. v. Waterville, 96 Me. 234, 52 A. 774. Whether the property of public utilities forms a class which may fairly be thought to require a different kind of procedure from that adopted for the taking of other property by eminent domain is primarily a question for the state itself." (178 Cal. 316, 173 P. 472.)

[16] Turning from these statements of the general rule to the application thereof to the point urged by appellant, we find that it has been uniformly held that laws relating to the acquisition of private property by municipal corporations for public improvements and prescribing the manner in which the right of eminent domain shall be exercised by such municipalities as well as the procedure to be followed in actions to enforce that right are to be regarded as general laws relating to all persons in a class founded upon a sufficient legal distinction. Thus in Clute v. Turner, 157 Cal. 73, 106 P. 240, 242, where it was contended that the Street Opening Act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70) was unconstitutional because not a general law, it was said: "The class to which the act applies is a well-recognized class, to which general legislation of the character mentioned in the title of the act may be addressed, namely, municipalities, and the subject of that legislation, the laying out and opening of streets and other public places, is one usually committed to such municipalities, either by charter or general laws, as matter of municipal concern, and a law which provides for all municipalities a system for opening and extending streets and kindred matters, such as are embraced in the title to the act, is uniform in its operation." See, also, Davies v. City of Los Angeles, 86 Cal. 37, 24 P. 771; Cohen v. City of Alameda, 124 Cal. 504, 57 P. 377, and Alameda v. Cohen, 133 Cal. 5, 65 P. 127. In City of Los Angeles v. Zeller, 176 Cal. 194, 167 P. 849, 850, where the proceedings involved were under the Act of 1903, the court observed that "proceedings for the opening, widening, and improving of streets in municipalities form a subject for special treatment and procedure," while in Frank v. Maguire, 201 Cal. 414, 257 P. 515, 518, it was held that "the act of 1903 covers a field of legislation to which the general code sections are not made adaptable, and is a law general as to all coming within its provisions," and that it "involves no unlawful discrimination."

[17, 18] A further attack is made by appellant upon the constitutionality of the amendment based upon the claim that both section 13 of article 1 of the state Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution have been violated by the application of the provisions of the 1927 amendment to this pending case. Both of these constitutional inhibitions are against the deprivation of any person of life, liberty, or property "without due process of law." As applied to judicial proceedings, the phrase "due process of law" imports an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case in which a person is accorded an opportunity to be heard and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights. County of Santa Clara v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co. (C. C.) 18 F. 385. It has the same meaning as the expression "by the law of the land," as used in Magna Charta. Den ex Dem. Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372. It means a process which, "following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case, and just to the parties to be affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law; it must be adapted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties, it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought." Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 701, 4 S.

Ct. 663, 667, 28 L. Ed. 569. It was undoubtedly the purpose of the framers of both constitutional guaranties to secure to every person a judicial trial according to the established rules of law, before he could be deprived of either life, liberty, or property. Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293, 318. Applying these principles to actions of the nature of the case before us, it was said by Mr. Justice Bradley, in his concurring opinion in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 107, 24 L. Ed. 616, quoted in Hagar v. Reclamation District, supra, that: "In judging what is 'due process of law,' respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these; and if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be 'due process of law,' but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared to be not 'due process of law.'" In amplification of the statement just quoted it was further held in Davidson v. New Orleans, supra: "That whenever by the laws of a State, or by State authority, a tax, assessment, servitude, or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole State or of some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed, in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, however obnoxious it may be to other objections." In the instant case the appellant, having been regularly served with a copy of the complaint and summons, as provided by law, in due time filed his answer; served with notice of motion to have the cause set for trial, he waived trial by jury and had a hearing before referees, in which evidence was adduced by the city on the one hand and by himself on the other; objecting to the findings and report of the referees as to the value of his property, he filed his objections thereto and was accorded a hearing thereon in the superior court, with an opportunity to produce evidence in support of his objections. He received notice of every step in the proceeding, and so far as the record shows was given every opportunity to present his side of the case to an impartial tribunal. The fact that he is dissatisfied with the rulings of that tribunal on matters of law does not justify his contention that he has been deprived of due process of law. As said in Davidson v. New Orleans, supra: "There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the Fourteenth Amendment. In fact, it would seem, from the character of many of the cases before us, and the arguments made in them, that the cause under consideration is looked upon as a means of bringing to the test of the decision of this court the abstract opinions of every unsuccessful litigant in a State court of the justice of the decision against him, and of the merits of the legislation on which such a decision may be founded."

[19, 20] Having disposed of the various constitutional questions presented by appellant, we now turn to his claim that whether or not Judge Keetch was correct in ruling that the 1927 amendment did not apply and in instructing the jury that compensation was to be ascertained as of the date of the trial (as provided in section 10 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 prior to such amendment and as it stood when the action was commenced), his view of the law as so expressed was binding upon Judge Shaw at the subsequent hearing of the referees' report and the exceptions thereto. Appellant's argument is based upon the theory that, as held in People v. Grace, 77 Cal. App. 752, 247 P. 585, 588, the superior court is but one tribunal no matter into how many departments it may be divided, and "an order made in one department during the progress of a cause can neither be ignored nor overlooked in another department in which the cause falls by transfer." We dispute not the correctness of this premise, but are unable to accept the conclusion which appellant draws therefrom. An order is thus defined: "Every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, is denominated an order." Code Civ. Proc. § 1003. Manifestly, if an order has been made in the course of an action it is binding on the litigants and court alike so long as it has not been set aside. In People v. Grace, supra, an order had been made granting a defendant in a criminal case a trial as to his sanity. The case was transferred to another department of the court which proceeded to try the defendant for the crime with which he was charged, entirely overlooking the previous order for a trial as to sanity. We there held that this order was as binding upon the judge sitting in the department to which the case was transferred "as if the latter judge had made it himself." The situation there was entirely different from one in which the court changes a ruling previously made by it on a point of law arising in the case before it. True, the court is but one tribunal, and its rulings are to be regarded as the rulings of that tribunal rather than of the particular judge who happens to occupy the bench at the time they were made, the situation in its legal aspect being as though there was but one judge; but if appellant's argument be followed to its logical and ineluctable conclusion, it would lead to the astounding fallacy that a judge having ruled erroneously is without power to reverse himself and thus correct his own error. This is not the law. The doctrine that a previous ruling has become the law of the case has no application except as to the decisions of appellate courts. 2 Cal. Jur. 955; Lawrence v. Ballou, 37 Cal. 518. The correct rule is stated in De La Beckwith v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 496, 80 P. 717, 718, as follows: "It is a most common occurrence for a trial court to change its rulings during the progress of a trial, upon questions of law, and no one would contend that it is not within its power to do so, or that it should not do so when satisfied that the former ruling was erroneous." If the court below, speaking through Judge Shaw, was convinced that it had ruled erroneously when speaking through Judge Keetch, it was not only its right but its duty to reverse its former ruling.

Appellant's next point is that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it discloses that the sum appropriated by the city council towards the expense of the proceeding was in violation of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Section 2 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 as amended in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 238, § 1) provides that the "city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of, or any sum toward the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality, in which case the sum or percentage to be paid shall be stated in said ordinance of intention." Section 37, article 3 of the City Charter (St. 1925, pp. 1024, 1045) contains this provision: "The Council shall have power to provide for any or all of the following improvements, to wit: * * * and to make the costs and expenses thereof, including all incidental expenses and any damages to private property occasioned thereby, to be paid from the general fund of the city or from such other fund as the Council may designate; or to make such costs and expenses, including such incidental expenses and damages, a lien upon the abutting property, or upon property in districts according to benefits, which lien shall be a first lien, paramount to all other liens except those for state, county and municipal taxes; and to make and enforce provisions for the enforcement of such lien. * * *" The ordinance of intention to order the improvement which is the object of these proceedings (adoption of which was the initial step therein) is set forth as an exhibit to the complaint and by appropriate pleadings made by a part thereof. Section 5 of said ordinance is as follows: "It is further ordered and declared by said City Council of the City of Los Angeles that the sum of One Hundred Forty-Eight Thousand Seven Hundred Eight and No-100 Dollars ($148,708.00) be paid towards the expense of said improvement in Section I of this ordinance described out of the treasury of said city." It is appellant's theory that the charter provision does not authorize the council to appropriate any sum less than the whole cost of the proceeding, and that some specific fund must be designated from which the expenditure is to be made.

[21-23] In support of his position appellant cites the case of O. T. Johnson Corporation v. City of Los Angeles, 198 Cal. 308, 245 P. 164, 170. The proceeding there involved was under the Street Opening Act of 1903 prior to the 1925 amendment of section 2 thereof, that section then providing that "said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality from such fund as the council may designate, in which case it shall be so stated in said ordinance of intention." The city's only authority to pay a portion of the cost of an assessment proceeding taken under the act was derived from this section of the act itself, since the charter as it then existed contained no provision of the nature of section 37 of article 3 above quoted. Under these circumstances and in the light of the law as it then stood, it was held that "as neither the percentage of the cost of the improvement to be borne by the city nor the fund from which such expenditure was to be made were ordered, declared, or designated in the ordinance of intention, the failure to follow the terms of the act in those respects resulted in a lack of jurisdiction to proceed." The act as it now stands and has stood during the pendency of these proceedings does not require a designation in the ordinance of the fund from which the expenditure is to be made; and moreover, the city's authority is now derived not from the act but from its charter, the provisions of which are supreme and supersede all general laws inconsistent therewith as to such matters as the Constitution has authorized to be provided for in freeholders' charters. Morgan v. City of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 301, 187 P. 1050; Kubach Co. v. McGuire, 199 Cal. 215, 248 P. 676; Graham v. Fresno, 151 Cal. 465, 91 P. 147. Among these matters are those falling under the designation "municipal affairs" (section 6, art. 11, Cal. Const.), and in this category are included proceedings for the opening and widening of streets (Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525; Byrne v. Drain, 127 Cal. 663, 60 P. 433) and for other street improvements, and in case of a conflict between a charter provision and a general improvement law the provisions of the charter will prevail. Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett, 177 Cal. 560, 171 P. 304; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Costa, 171 Cal. 138, 152 P. 296. The charter does not require a designation in the ordinance of intention of the fund from which is to be paid the portion of the expense to be borne by the city, as did the section of the act involved in the O. T. Johnson Case as it then read, and it does provide that it may be paid from the general fund, which is the collective designation of all moneys in the city treasury not set apart for particular purposes and which furnish the means for the support of the municipality and the defraying of the discretionary appropriations of its legislative body. People v. Orange County Supervisors, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 575; Smith v. Haney, 73 Kan. 506, 85 P. 550. An order that the payment be "out of the treasury of said city" is tantamount to an order that it be paid from the "general fund."

An objection similar to that raised by appellant was held untenable in Frank v. Maguire, supra, from the opinion in which case we again quote: "It is next contended that the act of 1903 as now in force, when read in connection with the charter of the city, requires that the fund from which the city's proportion of the expense is to be paid must be designated in the ordinance of intention. Prior to the amendment of 1925, section 2 of the act, so far as material here, read as follows: 'Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality from such fund as the council may designate, in which case it shall be so stated in said ordinance of intention.' * * * By the amendment of 1925 that portion of the section was made to read as follows: 'Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of, or any sum toward the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality, in which case the sum or percentage to be paid shall be stated in said ordinance of intention.' * * * It will be noted that the clause 'from such fund as the council may designate' was omitted from the section as amended. Section 6 of the ordinance of intention provides: 'It is further ordered and declared by said city council of the city of Los Angeles that the sum of $1,500,000.00 be paid toward the expense of said improvement, in section 1 of this ordinance described, out of the treasury of said city.' Under the statute prior to its amendment the name of the fund from which the contribution was to be paid was required to be stated. O. T. Johnson Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, supra. The undoubted purpose of the amendment was to avoid the requirement that the fund be so designated. When the time comes for the city to order the payment of the contribution, it must be assumed that such payment will be made from a fund from which it will be lawful to make the payment. The language of said section 6 is deemed sufficient for the purposes of the ordinance of intention."

[24] As an additional reason for rejecting appellant's contention it may well be pointed out that if the city was without authority to appropriate any sum less than the whole cost of the improvement the action of the council in attempting so to do was ultra vires and section 5 of the ordinance of intention void. If void, that particular section of the ordinance would be disregarded—treated as if it were not there—and the remainder of the enactment given full force, since the void portion could be eliminated and still leave a workable and enforceable ordinance. Mordecai v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 192 P. 40; Hunt v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 470, 173 P. 1097; Maclay v. Love, 25 Cal. 367, 85 Am. Dec. 133; Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 77 P. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249; Matter of Bonds San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 161 Cal. 345, 119 P. 198. The effect of this would simply be that the whole burden of the cost of the improvement would have to be borne by the assessment district without contribution from the city. So far from being benefited by such a construction of the city's power as appellant contends for, it would operate to increase the amount of the assessment as to his remaining property in the district as well as all other assessments on property therein.

[25, 26] As to the point that the city charter authorizes the council to appropriate the whole but not a portion of the cost of the improvement it is only necessary to point out that the language of section 37 is permissive, not mandatory, and inasmuch as the appropriation is made before the amount of compensation to be paid the owners of property taken or damaged is ascertained in the trial of the condemnation suit, the total amount of which compensation forms the bulk of the expense of the proceeding, it would be manifestly impossible for the council to determine in advance what would be the entire cost and to appropriate that amount. Furthermore, we find no conflict between the permission thus accorded the council by the charter and the provision of section 2 of the act as amended in 1925 to the effect that the council may order "the whole or any percentage of, or any sum" towards the expense of the improvement to be paid out of "the treasury of the municipality," and it is our duty to construe both of these laws, the charter and the statute, in so far as they deal with the same general subject-matter, as though they were but one act, each referring to and supplementing the other, harmonizing them so far as possible so as to give force to each without destroying the meaning or intent of the other. Spreckels v. Graham, 194 Cal. 516, 228 P. 1040; Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 44 P. 238; McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122. So construing them, we are of the opinion that the provisions of the charter permit the city to avail itself of those of section 2 of the statute.

[27, 28] Appellant next urges that the order setting the cause for trial and appointing referees was violative of section 8 of the act (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1145, § 6), which provides that when all defendants have answered or their defaults have been entered a motion may be made, on notice to those who have appeared, to set the case for trial, in that said order was made prior to the filing of several answers and the taking of several defaults against defendants failing to answer. Appellant's own answer was filed more than seven months before the order setting the case was made; the state of the record was as open to him as to the city; he was served with notice of motion to set, and the record herein discloses no objection on his part to the setting of the case. He cannot be heard to raise such an objection for the first time on this appeal. 2 Cal. Jur. 234; Griess v. Investment Co., 98 Cal. 241, 33 P. 195. Moreover, if error was committed by setting the case for trial before all answers were in and all defaults entered, appellant has failed to show in what manner, if at all, he was injured thereby. Such error, if error there was, was of the most harmless description and well within the purview of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

[29, 30] The next two points raised by appellant may be considered together, as they both rest largely upon the same argument. His contention is that the interlocutory judgment signed by Judge Keetch following the jury trial as to certain parcels of land "does not follow the verdict of the jury," in that it was, as to some of those parcels, based upon stipulations as to value instead of evidence submitted to the jury, and that the findings signed by Judge Shaw following the hearing of the referees' report are open to the same objection. Appellant had no interest in any of the parcels to which these stipulations related, and it is difficult to see in what manner he could possibly be affected, since "the damage to one [defendant in an action in eminent domain] will in no particular depend upon the damage to the others. Neither party will be interested in any allowance for damages except his own." Weiler v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 729, 207 P. 247, 248. His theory, however, is that his land not taken will be subject to assessment to pay the expense of the improvement, which assessment will be based on compensation awarded without any evidence of value having been submitted to the jury in the one instance and to the court in the other. We see no reason why the parties to an action in eminent domain may not, if they choose, stipulate as to the fact of value as well as to any other fact, just as they may do in any other type of action. 23 Cal. Jur. 816. Such stipulations have always been regarded by the courts as establishing the facts stipulated and as taking the place of evidence with regard thereto. See long list of cases cited in footnotes on page 816, article on "Stipulations," in 23 Cal. Jur. A situation somewhat analogous to that of which appellant complains arose in the case of Adamson v. County of Los Angeles, 52 Cal. App. 125, 198 P. 52, in that a portion of the compensation awarded the landowner was fixed by stipulation and not by the deliberations of the jury on evidence presented to them. The jury in that case had found that the amount of fencing required to fence the owner's land abutting the roadway condemned was 29 miles and that the cost thereof was \$650 per mile, to which sum the owner was entitled as compensation in addition to the value of the strip of land taken and the severance damages. One of the grounds urged on a motion for new trial was that the jury had erroneously computed the amount of mileage of fencing required. This point the trial court found well taken and that the correct mileage was $31\frac{1}{2}$ miles, for which the defendant owner should have been awarded further compensation at the same rate per mile. It therefore required the county to consent to this increase of compensation as a condition to a denial of the motion for new trial, whereupon the county counsel, representing the plaintiff county, filed a stipulation consenting to this increase in the amount of the defendant's compensation over and above the compensation found by the jury. One of the grounds urged by the appellant owner for a reversal was that the lower court had no power to act on this stipulation "and by so doing to change the amount of compensation fixed by the jury." This contention the court held to be without merit. The same point was urged in County of Los Angeles v. Rindge Co., 53 Cal. App. 166, 200 P. 27, which case involved the same proceeding as that in the Adamson Case, it being urged that the effect of the trial court's ruling on the motion for new trial and its action on the stipulation "was an exercise by the court of the functions of the jury, by reason of which defendants were deprived of the constitutional right of having a vital element of damage determined by the jury." This contention was held untenable. Hearings in the Supreme Court after judgment in this court were denied in both of these cases.

We have carefully examined the other points made by appellant and find them without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

WENDT v. GATES et al. (Civ. 7075.)*

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 4, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1930.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1008(1)—Whether findings for defendants are conclusions depends on nature of evidence.

In action in ejectment, whether findings of fact for defendants are conclusions depends on nature of evidence.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 757(3)—Appellate court could not hold that findings for defendant in ejectment were conclusions, where plaintiff's brief did not set forth evidence supporting contention.

In action in ejectment where plaintiff's brief on appeal set forth no evidence supporting his contention that findings of fact for defendants were conclusions, appellate court could not hold that findings were conclusions.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1008(1)—Court's finding in ejectment that plaintiff's vendor appeared in foreclosure proceedings could not be held erroneous, where answer therein was filed for defendants.

In ejectment action where it appeared that plaintiff's vendor had been named as party defendant in foreclosure action, judgment of which was pleaded as bar, where answer was filed by defendants and judgment recited that evidence was received on part of parties herein concerned, appellate court was unable to say that trial court erred in making implied finding that plaintiff's vendor appeared and answered in foreclosure proceedings.

4. Judgment $\S$ 279—Minute order dismissing foreclosure action as to plaintiff's vendor held not part of judgment roll and incompetent in ejectment to impeach foreclosure judgment (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 670).

Minute order of court, dismissing foreclosure action as to plaintiff's vendor because summons was not served and returned within three years, held not competent evidence in ejectment action to impeach judgment in foreclosure action, since under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 670, such order was no part of judgment roll, and only judgment roll could be considered in attack on judgment.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(3)—Judgment for defendants must be affirmed, although plaintiff's attacks on certain findings are sustained, where judgment is supported by other findings.

Although plaintiff's attacks on certain findings are sustained, judgment for defendants must be affirmed, where supported by remaining findings, which are supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Fred Wendt against Pearl E. Gates and husband. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frederick Dubovsky and E. E. Keyes, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Vallandigham & Hollingsworth, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action in ejectment against the defendants. The defendants answered and a trial was had before the court without a jury. The court made findings of fact in favor of the defendants, and from a judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up typewritten transcripts.

[1, 2] In findings 1 and 2 the trial court found that the defendants were the owners and that the plaintiff had no interest in the property involved. The plaintiff contends that the findings were conclusions. In his brief he does not set forth any of the evidence supporting his contention. Whether the findings mentioned are or are not conclusions depends on the nature of the evidence. In Levins v. Rovigno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 P. 161, the court was considering the same attack in an action of ejectment. At page 278 of 71 Cal., 12 P. 164, the court said: "If, from the facts in evidence, the result can be reached by that process of natural reasoning adopted in the investigation of truth, it becomes an ultimate fact, to be found as such. If, on the other hand, resort must be had to the artificial processes of the law, in order to reach a final determination, the result is a conclusion of law." From all that is set forth in plaintiff's brief we cannot say that the findings were conclusions.

In the next place the plaintiff contends that finding No. 3, which is on the subject of adverse possession, is contrary to the evidence. In his brief he quotes no evidence and does not even cite the reporter's transcript.

[3] Finding No. 4 was in response to an allegation pleading a judgment in bar. The plaintiff asserts that his vendor was not served with process and made no appearance in the former action and therefore this plaintiff is not barred by the judgment. On the trial of the instant case, the judgment roll in an action foreclosing a mortgage, Stump et al. v. Marvin et al., No. 11944, records of the county clerk of Sonoma county, was introduced. In that action plaintiff's vendor, George W. Riddell, was named as a party defendant. Summons was issued and returned and the record does not show that Riddell was or was not served. An answer was filed by "the defendants." The same expression is used several times in the answer. David E. Williams signed the answer as attorney for "the defendants." The judgment recites that Williams withdrew as attorney for certain defendants, naming them, but not naming Riddell. The judgment further recites that evidence was received "on the part of the parties herein concerned." This court is unable to say that the trial court erred in making an implied finding in this action that Riddell appeared and answered in the foreclosure proceedings.

[4] The judgment in the foreclosure proceedings was entered May 18, 1921. In a supplemental transcript the plaintiff inserts what he claims to be a minute order made January 20, 1928, and which in form is an order dismissing the said action No. 11944 as to the defendant Riddell because summons was not served and returned within three years. The record is not clear as to whether said order was received in evidence in the instant case. Be that as it may, it was not competent evidence in this collateral proceeding to impeach the judgment in action No. 11944. It was no part of the judgment roll in said action. Code Civ. Proc. § 670. Therefore, in the instant case, said order could not be used for the purpose of disproving any recital contained in the judgment in action numbered 11944. It is well settled that the judgment roll only can be considered in such an attack. 15 Cal. Jur. 290, § 276; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 404, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Hobbs v. Duff, 43 Cal. 485, 490, 491; City of Los Angeles v. Glassell, 203 Cal. 44, 49, 262 P. 1084.

[5] The plaintiff claims that finding No. 5, which treats of adverse possession, was not responsive to any allegation made in the pleadings. An inspection of the clerk's transcript shows that the contention is well founded. If the plaintiff's attacks on findings 1, 2, 3, and 5 are each and all sustained, nevertheless the judgment must be affirmed because it is supported by the remaining findings, which, as we have shown, are sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to quiet title. The defendants appeared and answered and filed a cross-complaint. The cross-complaint was answered and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the defendants, and from a judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up typewritten transcripts.

The title to the property involved rests on the judgment that was involved in the action
Wendt v. Gates et al. (Civ. 7075) 283 P. 312, this day filed. In their cross-complaint the defendants pleaded that judgment in bar. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendants on the issues involving that judgment. The material facts and the law pertinent thereto are the same as in Wendt v. Gates et al. For the reasons there stated the judgment must be the same. Under these circumstances it is unnecessary to discuss any other points made by the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. v. BABCOCK et al. (Civ. 3967.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 16, 1929.

1. Estoppel ⇨118, 121—Judgment denying mandatory injunction requiring removal of buildings from electric line right of way because of estoppel held not sustained by findings or evidence.

In city's action for mandatory injunction to require defendants to remove their buildings from city's right of way for electrical transmission lines under recorded right of way deed providing that no buildings or other structure should be erected on right of way, pastoral, agricultural, and mineral rights only being reserved, findings that use of city's easement by defendants had been acquiesced in by city, based solely on testimony that defendants had not been notified to remove buildings from right of way, and that city employees patrolled right of way approximately once a week, held insufficient to support judgment for defendant on theory that city was estopped, in absence of evidence or finding that city's agents or employees knew that defendants' buildings trespassed on easement, or that defendants relied on any act or word of such persons or changed their position in reliance thereon.

2. Easements ⇨22—Record of power line easement gave subsequent purchasers of lots constructive notice of exterior lines of right of way.

Where conveyance to city of right of way for electric power line, providing that no buildings or other structures should be erected thereon, and reserving only pastoral, agricultural, and mineral rights, had been on record for years prior to defendants acquiring their lots or erection of any buildings thereon, defendants were presumed as a matter of law to have had knowledge of exterior lines of right of way belonging to city.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles and another against William Babcock and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Jess E. Stephens, W. B. Mathews, Floyd M. Hinshaw, and Kenneth K. Scott, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sherman & Sherman and R. J. Gardner, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This action was instituted to obtain a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to remove certain buildings from a right of way belonging to the city of Los Angeles, upon which it had established, and was maintaining, electrical transmission lines. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The record shows that in 1916, the plaintiff, city of Los Angeles, became the owner of a right of way 120 feet in width, for the erection and maintenance of electric light and power transmission lines; that along the center of said right of way the city had erected, and for a number of years had been maintaining, such lines; that the deeds conveying a right of way to the city of Los Angeles was of record in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles; that the deed of conveyance of said right of way provided that no buildings or other structure should be erected thereon, pastoral, agricultural, and mineral rights only being reserved. Subsequent to the acquiring of the easement and right of way herein mentioned, the premises involved, together with other premises adjoining, were subdivided into city lots, the defendants named becoming owners of certain lots partly covered by the easement and right of way owned by the city of Los Angeles.

The judgment of the trial court was to the effect that the city of Los Angeles was estopped from demanding the removal of the buildings referred to in the plaintiff's complaint.

[1] Upon this appeal a number of grounds for reversal are assigned and presented to this court for consideration, only one of which, however, needs to be mentioned, to wit, that the court erred in holding that the city of Los Angeles was estopped from demanding the removal of the buildings from its right of way over lots 58, 70, and 73 of tract No. 5552, or had ever acquiesced in the erection and maintenance thereof. If this holding is erroneous, then and in that case the judgment should be reversed, irrespective of any of the other assignments. An examination of the findings will determine whether the assignment of error which we have quoted is tenable. Omitting all the preliminary matters contained in findings 1, 2, 3, and 4, relative to the city of Los Angeles being a municipal corporation and operating an electric transmission line, and the description of the right of way acquired in 1916, by the city of Los Angeles, we come to finding No. 5 which sets forth that the deed of conveyance to the city of Los Angeles, for the right of way referred to, was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles on the 26th day of June, 1916. Finding No. 6 is to the effect that, ever since the 6th day of June, 1916, the board of water and power commissioners has maintained, and now maintains and operates over said easement, electric wires for the transmission of electric energy to the city of Los Angeles, said wires carrying, at the time of the trial, approximately 110,000 volts of electricity; that the power line now existing on said easement is along the center line thereof. Finding No. 7 is to the effect that the premises referred to had been subdivided into city lots, and that the easement covers a portion of said lots. Finding No. 8 is in these words: "The court finds that the maintenance, use and occupancy of said buildings and structures upon plaintiff's easement prevent, and are a continuous and constant interference with the free, full and perfect use and enjoyment by plaintiffs of the rights and easements granted them by said deed, but that the use of said easement by the defendants has been acquiesced in by the plaintiffs since the erection of said buildings." Finding No. 9 is to the effect that the plaintiffs, prior to the beginning of the suit, had not demanded the removal of said structures. Finding No. 10 is to the effect that on May 7, 1923, the defendant Lulu Wilson entered into a contract for the purchase of lot 58, and, in the year 1924, erected a garage thereon, and that on July 9, 1925, the defendant Lulu Wilson became the owner of said lot 58; that a residence erected upon said lot 58 projects 7.15 feet upon the easement and right of way of the plaintiff. Finding No. 11 is to the effect that Jess Chenoweth is the owner of lot 70; that the buildings on said lot were erected in the year 1924; that a certain frame building on said lot projects 9.21 feet over and upon the easement and right of way of the plaintiff. Finding No. 12 is to the effect that Charles E. Luring and Alice Luring are the owners of lot 73, and erected a residence and garage thereon in the month of February, 1923; that the buildings erected by the Lurings project from 14 to 24 feet over and upon the easement and right of way belonging to the plaintiff; that a garage erected by said defendants stands wholly upon the easement or right of way. Finding No. 13 is to the effect that the buildings referred to do not constitute a fire hazard. Finding No. 14 is as follows: "The court finds that during the erection of the buildings so erected and constructed by defendants upon said lots 58, 70 and 73 of Tract No. 5552, and continuously thereafter to the date of the filing of plaintiff's complaint, plaintiff's agents and employees regularly patrolled the said right of way approximately once each week." Finding No. 15 is to the effect that the city of Los Angeles, in erecting and maintaining electrical transmission lines, is acting in a proprietary capacity. Finding No. 16 is to the effect that Raymond Luring and Ina M. Luring are the owners of lot 71 of the tract referred to, subject to the easement belonging to the city of Los Angeles. Finding No. 17 is to the effect that Charles E. Luring and Alice Luring are the owners of lot 73, subject to the permanent easement and right of way belonging to the city of Los Angeles. Finding No. 18 is to the effect that Jess Chenoweth is the owner of lot 70, subject to the permanent easement belonging to the city of Los Angeles. From these findings the court drew the following conclusions of law: That plaintiffs are estopped from demanding the removal of the now existing buildings and structures situate upon lots 58, 70, and 73 of said tract.

The latter portion of finding No. 8, to the effect that the use of the easement belonging to the city has been acquiesced in, is based simply upon testimony to the effect that the defendants had not been notified to remove the buildings from the right of way belonging to the city of Los Angeles, and further testimony to the effect that agents and employees, or, rather, to the effect that employees patrolled the right of way approximately once a week to observe the condition of the electric wires and transmission lines erected on the same. There is not a word of testimony in the record to the effect that these agents or employees of the city knew or had any knowledge that the buildings erected by the defendants trespassed upon the easement or right of way belonging to the city, or ever said a word to any of the defendants relative to the buildings involved, or that any of the city employees knew anything whatever of any of the acts of the defendants, or that the defendants relied upon a single act or word of any of the persons patrolling the power and transmission lines belonging to the city.

Upon the findings which we have set forth, the court drew the conclusion that the city was estopped, and entered judgment on the theory that the city was estopped. It requires only a reading of the findings to show that there is not a single element of estoppel shown in this case. While the respective parties to this action have submitted a voluminous list of authorities, and by way of briefs made somewhat extensive arguments, it is unnecessary to follow the same. The findings are absolutely devoid of anything showing, or tending to show, that the defendants relied upon a single act, declaration, or representation of any of the plaintiffs, or any of their agents. The only mention of anything in the case, which does not amount to a scintilla of evidence, is an allegation in the answers of some of the defendants to the effect that the city issued a permit to erect buildings on a portion of the lots involved, no mention or allegation being made as to the portion of the lots upon which the buildings were to be erected. There is no finding to the effect, nor has our attention been called to any allegation in the pleadings or testimony in the transcript showing that the defendants, or any of them, have changed their position by reason of any act, thing, or conduct on the part of the plaintiffs, or any of their agents. There is no mention in the findings, no allegation in the pleadings, and no testimony showing that the defendants, or any of them, ever made any effort to ascertain the exterior lines of the easement or right of way belonging to the city of Los Angeles, nor any finding, allegation, or testimony in the transcript that the defendants, or any of them, were ever misled as to such exterior boundaries. There is no finding, nor is there any allegation in the pleadings, or testimony in the transcript, showing that the defendants could not, by reasonable diligence, have ascertained the extent and exterior boundaries of the right of way belonging to the city. The poles and transmission lines were in place years before any of the defendants became interested in the three lots in question, and were there at the time the defendants, respectively, became the owners of the several lots, as heretofore stated. We need only to cite the general rules as to equitable estoppel set forth in 10 Cal. Juris. beginning on page 624, and 21 C. J. 1119, and the text following the pages of the respective volumes which we have cited, to show that there is nothing in the findings in this case to support the judgment, and that the court was in error as alleged by the plaintiffs. In 10 Cal. Juris. 626, the elements of estoppel are thus stated: "The vital principle of equitable estoppel is that he who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he has acted. * * * In general, four things are essential to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel; first, the party to be estopped must be apprised of the facts; second, he must intend that his conduct shall be acted upon, or so act that the party asserting the estoppel had a right to believe it was so intended; third, the other party must be ignorant of the true state of facts; and fourth, he must rely upon the conduct, to his injury."

[2] As we have said, there is not a word in the findings that the plaintiff, or any of its agents, were apprised of the trespass being committed by the defendants, nor is there a word in the findings to show that the city intended, by its conduct or by the conduct of any of its agents, that the defendants might erect buildings upon the easement or right of way belonging to the city. It may be that the defendants were ignorant of the exterior lines of the right of way belonging to the city, but as the conveyance to the city was on record, and had been on record for years prior to the acquiring of any of the lots or the erecting of any of the buildings by any of the defendants, they are presumed, as a matter of law, to have had such knowledge. As to "knowledge," we find the following on pages 636 and 637 of 10 Cal. Juris.: "It is an essential element of an estoppel by conduct that the party asserting it must be ignorant of the true state of facts and should have relied upon the representations or admission of the adverse party. If he relies upon negligence as the basis of the estoppel, he must show that such negligence was the proximate cause of the deceit. He need, however, not be destitute of all possible means of knowledge of the facts, it being sufficient if he is destitute of convenient and ready means to that end. To warrant reliance, a representation must be such as would induce a reasonable man to act upon it. * * * He must show that he was misled by the conduct of the other party; that in reliance thereon, he was induced to do something which he otherwise would not have done." There is nothing in the findings to this effect. There is not a line in the pleadings, not a word in the transcript, and nothing in the findings to which our attention has been called showing that the defendants, or any of them, relied upon any act, statement, or declaration of the plaintiffs, or of any of their agents. The facts, so far as the testimony shows and the findings show is to the effect that the defendants simply erected the buildings on the premises, and without any reference to the right of way or easement belonging to the city. The defendants had a convenient and ready means of ascertaining the exterior lines of the easement or right of way belonging to the city. In 21 Cal. Juris. 1119, the general rules relative to equitable estoppel are thus stated: "In order to constitute this kind of estoppel there must exist a false representation or concealment of material facts. It must have been made with knowledge, actual or constructive, of the facts. The party to whom it was made must have been without knowledge or the means of knowledge of the real facts. It must have been made with the intention that it should be acted upon, and the party to whom it was made must have relied on, or acted upon it, to his prejudice." There is nothing of the kind in the findings, and nothing in the pleadings or testimony called to our attention, sustaining any of these necessary elements of estoppel. And further, in the same volume, on page 1129, we find the following: "As a corollary to the proposition that the party setting up an estoppel must have acted in reliance upon the conduct or representations of the party sought to be estopped, it is, as a general rule, essential that the former should not only have been destitute of knowledge of the real facts as to the matter in controversy, but should have been also without convenient or ready means of acquiring such knowledge." And, further, on page 1130 of the same volume, it is stated: "A public record is an available means of information as to the question of title, and one who does not take advantage of it cannot claim estoppel against one who merely fails to furnish such information." All of these rules relative to estoppel which we have quoted are supported by an abundance of authorities, and these citations abundantly show that there is no escape from the conclusion that no judgment of estoppel is or can be supported by the findings in this case.

It follows, therefore, without further citation of authorities, that the judgment of the trial court must be, and the same is hereby, reversed.

RINKER v. CARL et al. (Civ. 3955.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Findings supported by testimony are conclusive.

Where there is testimony in record which, if believed by jury, is sufficient to sustain verdict, appellate courts are bound by jury's findings.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(6)—Evidence supported verdict for pedestrian on theory that defendant drove automobile to left of center of boulevard (Motor Vehicle Act, § 122).

In action for injury to plaintiff struck by defendant's automobile while crossing boulevard, evidence held sufficient to support verdict for plaintiff on theory that defendant was driving to left of center line of paved portion of boulevard under Motor Vehicle Act, § 122 (St. 1923, p. 557).

3. Automobiles ⇨245(72)—Pedestrian crossing paved highway is not contributorily negligent as matter of law in failing to look to left after reaching center line (Motor Vehicle Act, § 122).

It is not contributory negligence as matter of law for pedestrian crossing paved highway not to look to left after reaching center line, in view of Motor Vehicle Act, § 122 (St. 1923, p. 557), requiring drivers of vehicles to proceed on right side of highway or street.

4. Automobiles ⇨246(31)—In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile, instruction respecting contributory negligence held not erroneous.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing highway, instruction that in crossing highway pedestrian must safeguard himself from traffic reasonably to be expected, that before reaching center of street it was plaintiff's duty to look for traffic coming from his left, that after crossing medial line it was his duty to look for automobiles coming from his right, and that he had right to assume that automobiles would travel on right side of highway, and that automobiles operated on wrong side of highway would give ample warning, held not erroneous.

5. Automobiles ⇨217(5)—Pedestrian crossing boulevard held not under obligation to look both ways at all times.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street, from south to north, plaintiff held required to look to left which crossing southerly half and to look to right while crossing northerly half, but he was not under obligations to look both ways at all times.

6. Automobiles ⇨246(56)—Refusal of instruction respecting law as to speed of automobiles held not error in action for pedestrian's injuries, where it was not contended that excessive speed caused injuries.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing boulevard, refusal of instruction respecting law as to speed held not error, where no contention was made that injury was caused by reason of excessive speed and injury as found by jury must have resulted from defendant's automobile being driven on wrong side of road.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by Richard Rinker against J. C. Carl and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment against the defendant J. C. Carl in the sum of $8,000 as compensation for injuries suffered by him when the plaintiff was injured by an automobile driven by said defendant. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

The transcript shows that on or about the 22d of November, 1925, during the nighttime, the plaintiff was driving an automobile in a westerly direction along that certain highway in Los Angeles county known as and called Los Feliz boulevard; that when the plaintiff reached a certain point on said boulevard where it is intersected by Griffith Park drive the plaintiff turned his car across the boulevard in a southerly direction and parked the same at the side of Griffith Park drive. His purpose in doing so was to enable him to examine a signboard on the north side of Los Feliz boulevard, giving directions as to how to reach certain cities. The plaintiff, after parking his car in the Park drive, started to cross Los Feliz boulevard from the southerly side thereof, proceeding in a general northerly direction toward the point where the signboard was stationed. The paved portion of Los Feliz boulevard is shown by the testimony to be from 18 to 20 feet in width. After crossing a portion of the paved part of the boulevard, the plaintiff was run down and injured by an automobile owned and then operated by the defendant J. C. Carl. The plaintiff was severely injured, but, as no argument is made as to the excessiveness of the verdict, the extent of the injuries need not be considered.

[1, 2] It is contended on the part of the appellants that the testimony shows no negligence on the part of the defendant J. C. Carl, but does establish the fact of negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The testimony of witnesses called and examined on behalf of the defendants would indicate that the plaintiff was injured while he was on the southerly, or what would be the right one-half of the paved portion of the highway for an automobile driver when propelling his machine in an easterly direction; the contention of the appellants being that the plaintiff stepped in front of the machine driven by the defendant J. C. Carl at such a close distance to the automobile that it was impossible for the same to be stopped prior to the running down of the plaintiff. Upon this theory the appellants have argued the cause. If this version of the occurrence had been accepted by the jury, then and in that case we would unhesitatingly say that the verdict was sufficiently sustained by the testimony. We may admit that upon the record the preponderance of the testimony appears to be in favor of the appellants, but the rule is well established that, where there is testimony in the record which, if believed by the jury, is sufficient to sustain the verdict, appellate courts are bound by the findings of the jury. The testimony in this case, as it appears from the transcript, is in sharp conflict, and when there is a conflict, all we can legally do is to examine the record and ascertain if there is testimony upon which the verdict may rest if accepted by the jury. The chief contention made by the appellants is that the plaintiff, as he walked across the portion of Los Feliz boulevard, did not look in both directions. In support of this contention a number of cases are cited, which, however, no longer state the law in California. It is claimed on the part of the plaintiff that he was injured while on the northerly half of the paved portion of the highway; that at the time of the injury the defendant J. C. Carl was driving his automobile in an easterly direction; and that the law required his automobile, at the time and under the circumstances, to be driven on the southerly side of the paved portion of the boulevard. Before quoting the testimony upon which the verdict of the jury may be sustained upon this theory, we will quote section 122 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 557) which reads: "On all occasions, the driver of a vehicle shall drive the same upon the right half of a public highway and close to the right-hand edge or curb of such highway, unless it is impracticable to travel on such side of the highway and except when overtaking and passing other vehicles, in which latter case, the vehicle may be driven on the left side of the highway if such left side is clear and unobstructed for at least one hundred yards ahead." The amendment to this section by the Legislature in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 540) does not change this portion thereof, and the section as quoted was in full force and effect at the time of the injury complained of. There is no showing in the transcript that at the time of the injury it was impracticable to travel on the right side of the highway. It is not claimed that the appellants were passing any other vehicles, and there is no testimony in the record relative to the left side being clear and unobstructed, as required by the section. With this statement of the law in view, we may now consider the testimony of the plaintiff which relates directly to the injury, and which, if believed by the jury, is sufficient to sustain the verdict on the theory that the defendant J. C. Carl was driving his automobile to the left of the center line of the paved portion of Los Feliz boulevard at the time of the injury. The testimony of the plaintiff relative to the circumstances of the injury is as follows: "After I turned my machine off onto Griffith Park drive I went back across Los Feliz to look at the road sign. I wanted to go to Santa Monica and wanted to see this sign because I was not familiar with the road there. When I started walking across Los Feliz boulevard there was considerable traffic. I looked in both directions and thought that I had time to get across and started across. I saw cars coming from my left, but the nearest car was a good way down; it must have been pretty near a block. I started to cross Los Feliz and I was just past the center of the road when I was hit. I was four or five feet from the north edge of the pavement. As I passed the center of the road I looked at the other direction towards my right towards Glendale I saw cars coming. Then the next thing I got hit by a car coming from the left. The place where I got struck is down grade. I couldn't say what part of my body was struck. I was not facing this machine when it struck me; it came from the back or my left." As corroborative of this testimony the witness Bessie Beal testified as follows (speaking of the north side of the boulevard): "There was a little ditch there. Mr. Rinker was lying on the edge of the boulevard; on the edge of the north side of the boulevard and about two feet from the little ditch. The ditch is about two feet from the edge of the boulevard as I remember. He was lying within two feet of the ditch. I believe they were just picking him up as I was crossing the street. I could see where he was lying before I crossed the street. I saw him by the headlights of other cars. He was lying there before I got to him and they picked him up." This testimony shows the position of Mr. Rinker's body after being run down by the automobile. There is testimony in the record to the effect that the body rolled some 10 feet down hill after being struck by the automobile, but there is no testimony to the effect that it rolled either in a southerly or northerly direction. Consequently, in connection with the statement of the plaintiff that he was on the northerly portion of the paved highway at the time he was struck, the testimony of the witness Beal, that his body was within two or three feet of the northerly edge of the paved portion, was evidence for the jury to consider in determining where the automobile and the plaintiff were at the time of the impact, and whether the automobile was or was not on the northerly half of the paved highway, and in a position where it legally had no right to be.

[3] Basing their contention upon the statement of the plaintiff that he did not look to the left after reaching the center of the paved portion of the highway, appellants cite the cases of Niosi v. Empire Steam Laundry, 117 Cal. 257, 49 P. 185; Mayer v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 740, 173 P. 174; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493; Moss v. Boynton, 44 Cal. App. 474, 186 P. 631, and a few others where similar circumstances are involved, and urge upon the court that, as the plaintiff did not look to the left after reaching the medial line of the paved portion of the highway, he was guilty of contributory negligence. These cases, however, do not cite the law applicable to the circumstances here presented. By reason of the testimony which we have quoted and the verdict of the jury, we must hold that the plaintiff was injured while on the northerly half of the paved portion of the highway, by an automobile driven by the defendant J. C. Carl, traveling in an easterly direction, and that the law at that time, under the circumstances, required the automobile to be on the southerly half of the paved highway. Under these circumstances it is now well established that it is not contributory negligence as a matter of law for one crossing a paved highway from the south to the north not to look to the left or to the west after reaching the medial line; that the rules of the road require east-bound traffic to travel on the southerly half and west-bound traffic on the northerly half, and it is the duty of the pedestrian, when he reaches the southerly line walking northerly, to look to the right and safeguard himself against stepping in front of west-bound automobile. In California Jurisprudence, 1928, Permanent Supplement, on page 197, of the addenda, considering the subject of automobiles, we find the rules of law which we have referred to stated as follows: "If the established usage required the driver of vehicles to proceed on the right side of the highway or street, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, on proof that the injured person looked in the direction from which cars, proceeding in conformity with the law or custom, might have been expected to approach. A pedestrian has a right to expect the driver of an automobile to conform to the customary traffic laws. Thus, a judgment for the plaintiff is proper where it appears that in traversing the street he looked to the left and was injured by the defendant's vehicle which was approaching from the right on the left side of the street, or where the evidence shows that after having arrived at the center of the way, he looked to the right and was struck by the vehicle which was being driven on the wrong side of the street. He had the right to assume that no vehicle would approach him from the left beyond the medial line of the intersecting street."

This court, in the case of Towne v. Godeau, 70 Cal. App. 148, 232 P. 1010, 1011, where a similar question was involved, held that the plaintiff had a right to assume that no automobile driver would run him down from the left, or what, under the circumstances of that case, would be driving an automobile on the wrong side of the street. This, of course, does not give the plaintiff the privilege of reckless disregard of his own safety or entitle him to heedlessly place himself in a position of danger. But if the testimony accepted by the jury which we have quoted, is true, neither of these latter conditions are presented. The cases cited by the appellants to which we have heretofore referred are all limited in their application and shown to have no bearing upon the issue before us. In the case of Burgesser v. Bullock's, 190 Cal. 673, 214 P. 649, the circumstances of that case, as applied to the case at bar, show that the authorities cited by the appellants are inapplicable, and it was simply a question for the jury as to the plaintiff's contributory negligence at the time he was injured by the automobile driven by the defendant.

Again, in the case of Nickell v. Rosenfield, 82 Cal. App. 369, 255 P. 760, 762, where it was contended that the injured party should have continually looked to the left, or should have looked in both directions for traffic, or otherwise held guilty of contributory negligence, was not sustained. It was there held, just as we have here stated, that the duty of the pedestrian is to look in the direction from which traffic is to be expected. Failing so to do he would be guilty of contributory negligence; but if he fails to observe an automobile approaching from the wrong direction, the pedestrian is not guilty as a matter of law for failing to observe the same, and if the jury finds in favor of the plaintiff, under such circumstances the verdict will not be disturbed on the ground that the plaintiff did not look in the direction from which traffic was not to be expected.

In the case of Henry v. Lingsweller, 81 Cal. App. 142, 253 P. 357, this court held as follows: "A pedestrian crossing a street near an intersection has a right to assume that no vehicle will approach him from the left, beyond the medial line of the street." In that case the plaintiff was crossing the street in the direction that an automobile approaching from the left would be traveling on the wrong side of the street. To the same effect is the case of Wright v. Foreman, 86 Cal. App. 595, 261 P. 481, and Rignell v. Font, 90 Cal. App.

730, 266 P. 588. Other cases might be cited, but the rules are well established, just as we have stated them, by the authorities cited.

[4-6] It is further urged that the court erred in its instructions to the jury. An examination of the instructions, however, reveals that the court very carefully instructed the jury, stating the law clearly and accurately upon the questions presented to them for consideration. The court in its instructions stated, among other things, the law correctly concerning contributory negligence, and the duty incumbent upon a pedestrian when about to cross a highway, stating, in substance, that in crossing a highway, it is the duty of the pedestrian to safeguard himself from the traffic reasonably to be expected upon the side of the highway, while crossing; that before he reached the center of the street in this case it was the duty of the plaintiff to look for traffic coming from the west or from his left and as he crossed the medial line of the paved portion, it was his duty to look out for automobiles coming from the east or from his right, and that he had a right to assume, until apprised to the contrary, that automobiles traveling eastward would travel on the southerly half of the paved portion of the highway, and that automobiles being operated on the wrong side of the highway would give ample warning of their approach. The court also instructed the jury that a person driving a vehicle on the public highway was required to drive the same at all times in a careful and at a prudent rate of speed, and not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface, width of the highway, etc. The court further instructed the jury that when one is about to cross the highway, or is crossing a highway, he is bound to use reasonable care, to look and listen as he proceeds across said road, in order that he may be able to avoid colliding with others exercising the common privilege of traveling on the highway. The court also instructed the jury that when the plaintiff entered upon the boulevard in question it was necessary to look to the left to protect himself from automobiles approaching from that direction, and gave to the jury the following instruction which, as we have shown by the authorities, is far more favorable to the defendants than they were entitled to under the law: "You are instructed that neither a pedestrian nor the driver of a vehicle has any right over a boulevard superior to the other, but each has the same right in common with the other, and in its exercise each is bound to use ordinary care for his own safety. Accordingly, one thus traveling across a boulevard, such as the one in question, is in duty bound to be alert and to look both ways, with ordinary care, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not he might be struck by an approaching vehicle, and if the plaintiff failed to do this, he was guilty of negligence, and if such negligence directly or proximately contributed to the happening of the accident in any degree, however slight, your verdict will be for the defendant, notwithstanding you may believe the defendant was guilty of negligence at the time and place of the accident." This, of course, is not a correct statement of the law. The plaintiff was not under obligations to look both ways at all times. He was under obligations to look to the left while crossing the southerly half of the boulevard and to look to the east when crossing the northerly half thereof. A failure to look both ways while he was crossing the respective halves of the boulevard did not, and would not, constitute negligence per se. At most it would only present the question of contributory negligence to the jury as a matter of fact, by reason of the rule prevailing that automobile drivers, under ordinary circumstances, must propel their cars on the half of the highway prescribed by section 122 of the Motor Vehicle Act as well as the authorities which we have here cited. Complaint is made that the court refused to instruct the jury that under the law the defendant J. C. Carl was entitled to drive his automobile at a speed of 35 miles per hour at the place of the collision. No contention is made that the injury was caused to the plaintiff by reason of the excessive speed of the automobile. The injury, as found by the jury, must have resulted from the automobile being driven on the wrong side of the road and where it should not have been, and where the plaintiff could not have reasonably expected it to be. Under these circumstances the fact that the owner of the automobile, under the law, may have been entitled to drive at a greater rate of speed than it was then moving, had it been on the proper side of the highway, is wholly immaterial. The refusal to give other instructions based upon the cases cited by the appellants, which we have stated, do not state the rules of law now prevailing in this state, need not be considered, as it would unduly extend this opinion and serve no useful purpose. It is sufficient to say that a reading of the instructions given by the court to the jury shows that the appellants suffered no injury therefrom.

102 Cal. App. 452

BAIRD v. OLSHESKI. (Civ. 6418.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1929.

1. Trover and conversion §32(4)—Mere allegation that defendant unlawfully took property is insufficient, in action for conversion.

Allegation, in action for conversion, merely that defendant unlawfully took property, was insufficient, in that words "wrongfully" and "unlawfully," when used in connection with issuable facts, are surplusage.

2. Trover and conversion §32(4)—No particular form of words is essential in averring conversion, providing fact of conversion is sufficiently stated.

No particular form of words is essential in averring a conversion, provided fact of conversion is sufficiently stated, and it is unnecessary to set forth in what way or by what means conversion was accomplished or to allege that property was wrongfully or unlawfully converted, since allegation that it was converted, which is a conclusion of fact, implies a wrongful act.

3. Trover and conversion §32(1)—Averment that defendant converted property after proper allegation of plaintiff's ownership thereof sufficiently stated cause of action.

In case plaintiff's ownership of property is sufficiently alleged, and there is an averment that defendant converted the same, a cause of action is sufficiently stated as against special demurrer directed only to allegations that taking was unlawful rather than to a material allegation of complaint.

4. Pleading §18—Complaint for conversion was not demurrable for uncertainty of allegation as to unlawful surrender of stock pledged to secure loan.

Complaint, in action for conversion, alleging surrender of stock pledged to secure payment of loan, was not subject to demurrer for uncertainty by reason of failing to show in what respect surrender of possession and custody of pledge was unlawful, in that surrender thereof was not material to a statement of cause of action, the gravamen of which was alleged failure to return pledge upon demand after payment of loan.

5. Pleading §18—Complaint alleging conversion of pledged stock must state with certainty date of payment and demand for return.

Complaint alleging conversion of stock pledged to secure loan must state with certainty the date of alleged payment and demand for return of stock as constituting material facts.

6. Corporations §123(14)—Parties may stipulate as to notice to be given before sale of stock pledged to secure loan.

Parties had right to stipulate as to notice to be given before sale of stock pledged to secure loan in that such agreement was not fraudulent or against statute on public policy.

7. Corporations §123(15)—Pledgor, in case of unauthorized sale by pledgee, may regard it as conversion and recover damages.

Where sale of stock pledged to secure loan as made by pledgee is not authorized, pledgor may regard it as a conversion and recover damages therefor, the relation between them in such case being in its nature a trust relation.

8. Pleading §18, 19—Allegations that pledgor received no notice of sale of pledged stock were not subject to demurrer either for uncertainty or ambiguity.

Allegations of complaint for conversion by reason of sale of stock pledged to secure loan, to effect that plaintiff received no notice of sale, were not subject to demurrer either for uncertainty or ambiguity.

9. Pleading §11—Whether agreement as to notice before sale of pledged stock was oral or written was matter of evidence and not of pleading.

Whether agreement between pledgor and pledgee relative to notice before sale of pledged stock was oral or written was matter of evidence and not of pleading, and it was unnecessary to allege such fact.

10. Corporations §123(14)—Additional consideration for pledgee's promise to give actual notice of sale of property was unnecessary.

Additional consideration for pledgee's promise to give actual notice of sale of stock pledged to secure loan was unnecessary, in view of allegations that such promise was part of original agreement and supported by same consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by C. S. Baird against Joseph O. Olsheski. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Clarence E. Todd, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Otto G. Kuklinski, of San Francisco (Jack A. Seaman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A demurrer by respondent to the second amended complaint filed in the above action was sustained with leave to amend. The plaintiff having failed to amend, a judgment, from which he has appealed, was entered against him.

[1, 2] The suit was for the conversion of certain corporate stock. The complaint set up three causes of action, to each of which a demurrer, both general and special, was interposed. The first cause of action alleged that plaintiff, on November 25, 1925, was the owner and lawfully possessed of stock, and "that on or about said last mentioned date the defendants unlawfully took and carried away said stock and have converted and disposed of the same to their own use to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000.

* * * " As the special ground of demurrer to this cause of action it was alleged that it could not be ascertained therefrom "in what respects defendant unlawfully took or carried away the said stock or converted and disposed of the same." As stated by respondent, the words wrongfully and unlawfully, when used in connection with issuable facts, are surplusage (21 Cal. Jur. [Pleading] § 16, p. 32), and it is not sufficient in an action for conversion to allege merely that the defendant unlawfully took the property. Triscony v. Orr, 49 Cal. 612. As held in Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 152, no particular form of words is essential in averring a conversion, provided the fact of the conversion is sufficiently stated, and it is unnecessary to set forth in what way or by what means the conversion was accomplished (Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 169, 42 P. 568; 25 Standard Encyclopedia of Procedure [Trove and Conversion] pp. 38, 39), or to allege that the property was wrongfully or unlawfully converted, since the allegation that it was converted, which is a conclusion of fact (31 Cyc. [Pleading] p. 54; Duggan v. Wright, 157 Mass. 228, 32 N. E. 159; Wells v. Connable, 138 Mass. 513), implies a wrongful act (Reish v. Reynolds, 68 Ind. 561; Cordill v. Minnesota Elevator Co., 89 Minn. 442, 95 N. W. 306; Nance v. Georgia C. & N. Ry. Co., 35 S. C. 307, 14 S. E. 629; McCarthy v. Heiselman, 140 App. Div. 240, 125 N. Y. S. 13; Barnett, etc., Co. v. Jarrett, 133 Ark. 173, 202 S. W. 474; Hooser v. G. M. Carlton, etc., Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 288 S. W. 1095).

[3] The rule appears to be well settled that, if plaintiff's ownership of the property is properly alleged, and there is an averment that the defendant converted the same, a cause of action is sufficiently stated (26 Ruling Case Law [Trove] § 39, pp. 1129, 1130). Respondent contends that, while a pleading containing the above allegations is sufficient as against a general demurrer, such is not the rule when a special demurrer is filed. Intimations to that effect appear in Daggett v. Gray, supra, and Florence v. Helms, 136 Cal. 613, 69 P. 429, but an examination of these cases shows that the excerpts quoted by counsel were in each case unnecessary to the decision. Moreover, the special demurrer in the present case was not directed to a material allegation of the complaint, but to the allegation that the taking was unlawful, which, as stated, is surplusage.

As a second cause of action, it was averred that appellant pledged the above stock, which was of the value of $1,000, to respondent, to secure the payment to him of $500 with interest; that respondent, without the knowledge or consent of appellant, thereafter surrendered the possession of the stock to one Crapuchettes, who at no time had an interest in the loan or the pledge agreement mentioned, and thereby placed the property beyond his power to redeliver upon the payment of the loan; that the amount of the loan, with interest, was thereafter paid to respondent, and demand made upon him for the return of the stock, which was refused, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000. The demurrer to the above was both general and special, the latter grounds being as follows: "That it cannot be ascertained * * * in what respects the alleged delivery or surrender of the possession and custody of the pledge was unlawful or damaged plaintiff; that it does not appear in said alleged cause of action when the plaintiff paid defendant the amount of said loan or interest, or when he demanded the return of said pledge; whether plaintiff claims that he offered to pay or paid defendant before the alleged surrender of the possession and custody of said pledge by defendant to said Leon P. Crapuchettes."

[4] The surrender of the pledge to Crapuchettes was not alleged to have been unlawful, nor was it the foundation of appellant's claim for damages. It was not material to a statement of his cause of action, the gravamen of which was the alleged failure of respondent to return the pledge upon demand after the payment of the loan with interest. The allegation was but a matter of inducement, and might have been omitted without impairing the sufficiency of the pleading. Consequently it was not subject to a demurrer for uncertainty, but to a motion to strike. Kraner v. Halsey, 82 Cal. 209, 22 P. 1137; Henke v. Eureka Endowment Association, 100 Cal. 429, 34 P. 1089.

[5] We find no merit in the further objection that the complaint failed to allege with certainty or at all whether payment was made or offered before or after the surrender of the stock to Crapuchettes, the fact of the surrender not being material, but the alleged payment and demand and the dates when the same were claimed to have been made were material facts, and the time of the occurrence of such facts must be stated with certainty; otherwise a complaint is demurrable. Wise v. Hogan Co., 2 Cal. Unrep. 893, 18 P. 784; Kraner v. Halsey, supra; Williamson v. Joyce, 137 Cal. 151, 69 P. 980; 21 Cal. Jur. (Pleading) § 23, p. 42. For the above reasons the demurrer to the second cause of action was properly sustained.

[6, 7] As a third cause of action it was alleged that the stock of the above value was pledged to defendant to secure a loan of $500 evidenced by a promissory note; that, as part of the contract, and for the same consideration, it was agreed that defendant should take no action to recover the debt before a sale of the pledge, after such actual notice to plaintiff of the time and place of sale as would be reasonably sufficient to enable him to attend. The defendant, contrary to the agreement, brought suit on the note, secured a judgment by default, and thereafter, "without notice to plaintiff as provided by law or otherwise and without the knowledge of plaintiff," caused execution to be levied and the stock sold. It was further alleged that defendant purchased the same at the execution sale; that the amount of the loan and the judgment were thereafter paid by the plaintiff, and a demand made for the return of the stock, which was refused, all to his damage in the above amount. That the parties might stipulate as to the notice to be given before a sale of the pledge, such agreement not being fraudulent and against statute or public policy is well settled. Hunter v. Hamilton, 52 Kan. 195, 34 P. 782; Dunbar v. Commercial Electrical, etc., Co., 32 Okl. 634, 123 P. 417; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Lazenby, 16 Ala. App. 549, 80 So. 25, 28; Jones, Pledges and Collateral Securities (2d Ed.) § 730. The relation between them in such a case is in its nature a trust relation (Hudgens v. Chamberlain, 161 Cal. 710, 120 P. 422); and, if the sale as made by the pledgee is not authorized, the pledgor may regard it as a conversion and recover damages therefor (Cushing v. Building Association, etc., 165 Cal. 731, 134 P. 324; 21 R. C. L. [Pledge] § 52, p. 691).

[8-10] The special objections to the above pleadings were in substance that it could not be ascertained therefrom in what respect the levy of execution and the sale of the stock was made "without notice to plaintiff as provided by law or otherwise"; whether the alleged agreement was in writing, or what additional consideration the defendant received therefor. The effect of the allegations of the complaint was that the plaintiff received no notice of sale, and these allegations were not subject to a demurrer either for uncertainty or ambiguity. Whether the agreement was oral or written was a matter of evidence and not of pleading, and it was unnecessary to allege the fact (Bradford Investment Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 204, 48 P. 1083; 12 Cal. Jur. [Statute of Frauds] § 107, p. 938); nor was an additional consideration for defendant's promise to give actual notice of the sale necessary, it being alleged that this promise was a part of the original agreement and supported by the same consideration.

While it is the rule, upon an appeal from a judgment rendered after refusal to amend a complaint to which a general and special demurrer has been sustained, to construe all ambiguities and uncertainties found in the pleading against the pleader, in the present case it is our conclusion that the first and third causes of action were not subject to demurrer on any of the grounds urged by the defendant, and that the demurrer thereto should have been overruled.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer to the first and third causes of action, and permit the defendant to answer the same within ten days after notice.

LE BRUN et ux. v. RICHARDS. (Civ. 5633.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 4, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 3, 1930.

1. Waters and water courses ☞118, 119(1)—Owner of dominant estate has natural easement to discharge surface waters over land of servient owner; servient owner is liable for obstructions causing water to back up or remain on upper proprietor's land.

Owner of dominant estate has legal and natural easement in servient estate to discharge all surface waters naturally falling or accumulating on his land on or over land of servient owner in manner in which it would naturally flow from a higher to a lower level, and owner of lower estate is answerable in damages for any injury which may be caused to upper estate by reason of obstructions which he has placed in the way of such natural flow, causing it to back up or remain on land of upper proprietor.

2. Waters and water courses ☞116—One may protect himself against flood waters notwithstanding barriers erected may cause floods to rise higher or flow with greater force on neighbor's land.

Flood waters are regarded as a common enemy, against which every man has a right to defend himself, regardless of fact that barriers erected for protection of his land may cause floods to rise higher or flow with greater force on his neighbor's land.

3. Waters and water courses ☞115—"Flood waters" are waters escaping from stream or other body of water and overflowing adjacent territory.

"Flood waters" are those which escape from a stream or other body of water and overflow adjacent territory.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second and Third Series, Flood Water.]

4. Waters and water courses ☞115—"Surface waters" are produced by rainfall, melting snow, or springs.

"Surface waters" are those which are produced by rainfall, melting snow, or springs, and such waters are not divested of their character as surface waters by reason of their flowing from land on which they first made their appearance onto lower land in obedience to law of gravity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Surface Water.]

5. Waters and water courses ☞119(2)—Upper proprietor may not divert surface waters by artificial means to lower proprietor's land; his right being limited to disposition of water through natural channels.

Upper proprietor may not by artificial means divert surface waters on his own land to lands of lower proprietor, nor may he accelerate by means of ditches or increase drainage of his own land to injury of lower owner, but his right is limited to disposition of the water through chosen channels of nature.

6. Waters and water courses §115—Water coming on plaintiffs' property because of street and other improvements held "surface water," and lower owner was liable to plaintiff for obstructing flow thereof.

Where, when defendant constructed irrigation ditch, fence, and embankment near plaintiffs' higher land, such improvements did not affect flow of surface waters detrimental to plaintiffs, but thereafter, owing to improvement of upper land by streets and other structures, surface waters which previously had flowed to either side of plaintiffs' and defendant's lands were thrown on plaintiffs' land, and defendant's ditch was inadequate to carry off torrent of water, and his embankment and fence obstructed its further progress and caused it to overflow plaintiffs' property, held that water so coming on plaintiffs' property was "surface water," and defendant was liable in damages for obstructing its flow across his property.

7. Waters and water courses §118—"Natural," used respecting flow of surface waters, has no necessary relation to course taken by flow prior to alteration of terrain by works of man or operation of nature.

The term "natural," as applied to course taken by surface water which lower proprietor must receive on his land, does not mean "original," and has no necessary relation to contour of terrain or to course taken by flow prior to alteration of either by works of man or by operation of forces of nature, but has reference to that course which would be taken by such waters falling or rising on land of upper proprietor or carried thereto from still higher land and flowing or running therefrom on lands of lower proprietor undiverted, and unaccelerated by any interference therewith by upper proprietor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Natural.]

8. Waters and water courses §118—That lower proprietor might have relief against those causing diversion of surface water held not to relieve him of liability to upper owner for obstructing such flow.

That defendant lower proprietor might have relief against those who caused original diversion of surface water so as to flow on his land, did not relieve him from liability to plaintiff upper proprietor for erecting obstructions to flow of such water and causing it to back up on plaintiff's land.

9. Waters and water courses §125—Measure of damages for obstructing natural flow of surface water, causing it to overflow upper owner's land, is difference in market value of land before and after injury.

Correct measure of damages for obstructing natural flow of surface water and causing it to back up and overflow upper owner's land, is difference, if any, in market value before and immediately after injury, not cost of repairing damages caused thereby.

10. Evidence §474(18)—Rule permitting non-expert to testify as to value of his property does not permit testimony respecting cost of repairs.

An owner of property may, without being qualified as an expert on values, testify as to his opinion of value of that which he owns, but this rule does not extend to the giving of testimony as to cost of repairs, especially where such testimony is merely a repetition of statements of other persons.

11. Waters and water courses §125—$1,000 for damages caused by obstructing flow of surface waters held not excessive under evidence.

In action for damages to realty caused by lower owner's obstructing natural flow of surface water causing it to back up on upper owner's land, award of $1,000 damages to upper owner held, under the evidence, not excessive.

12. Appeal and error §1013—Damages for discomfort and annoyance must be left to trial court's sound discretion after consideration of evidence.

Amount of damages to be allowed for discomfort and annoyance caused by a wrongful act is not susceptible of proof, but must be left to trial court's sound discretion, to be ascertained and adjudged after consideration of all the facts and circumstances established by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by Percy A. Le Brun and wife against R. J. Richards. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing granted by Supreme Court; LANGDON and SEAWELL, JJ., dissenting.

E. R. Young and Harlow Hurley, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. A. Lane and Victor T. Watkins, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. There is no dispute as to the facts of this case, which may be summarized as follows:

The plaintiffs, respondents here, are the owners of a parcel of land located at the south end of Vancouver avenue, on the westerly side of the street. Vancouver avenue extends in a southerly direction from Whittier boulevard, the latter running easterly and westerly. Both streets and all of the territory referred to in the evidence and findings are in Los Angeles county, outside of the boundaries of any incorporated city. Defendant-appellant owns a tract of land east of Vancouver avenue and south of the termination of that street; his property abutting that of the plaintiffs to the east and south and lying at a lower level. The general slope of the land south of Whittier boulevard, and also to the north of that thoroughfare, is from north to south. Prior to the making of certain improvements presently to be described, the storm and surface waters falling upon the lands north of Whittier boulevard, to quote the language of the court's findings, "flowed in two natural and well-defined channels, which channels were of the character of depressions or swales and diverged from a common point several thousand feet northerly of Whittier boulevard, and ran, one in a southeasterly, and one in a southwesterly direction, and entered Whittier boulevard at a point several thousand feet easterly and at a point several hundred feet westerly of plaintiffs' property and drained in a southerly direction therefrom without flowing over or upon the property of the plaintiffs or of the defendant." In May, 1922, prior to the laying out of Vancouver avenue, and also prior to the improvements referred to, the defendant constructed an irrigating ditch with earth embankments and a wire fence along the northerly side of his land and within a few feet of the south line of the plaintiffs' property. In 1924 the county of Los Angeles graded and paved Whittier boulevard, and since this improvement its elevation at a point about 1,500 feet westerly of Vancouver avenue is approximately 1½ feet higher than at Vancouver avenue, while its elevation at a point about 1,800 feet easterly of Vancouver avenue is over a foot higher than at Vancouver avenue. The lowest point, however, on Whittier boulevard between these points, is at Victoria, formerly known as Clela avenue, the street immediately west of Vancouver, and, like the latter, running south a short distance from Whittier. At about the same time that Whittier boulevard was being improved, a large area of land lying north of it, and extending for several thousand feet both easterly and westerly of Vancouver avenue, and which had in former years been used for grazing and later on for agricultural purposes, was subdivided and platted, and a large number of streets laid out thereon and graded and paved; the northerly ends of the north and south running streets being over 30 feet higher than the elevation of Whittier boulevard at its several points of intersection with the southerly termini of said streets. The court found: "That the grading and paving of said streets north of Whittier boulevard, resulted in the filling up and closing of said natural drainage channels north of Whittier boulevard and the storm and surface waters which formerly flowed across Whittier boulevard easterly of plaintiffs' property were diverted into Whittier boulevard at a point several hundred feet westerly of its natural channel and water that formerly crossed Whittier boulevard westerly of plaintiffs' property was diverted into Whittier boulevard at a point several hundred feet easterly of its natural channel and to a point several hundred feet easterly from where it usually flowed and crossed Whittier boulevard; that due to the graded and paved condition of said last mentioned streets, the natural flow of storm and surface water falling on those lands and the lands northerly thereof has been greatly accelerated with the result that during the rainy seasons of the year storm and surface waters flow in a southerly direction over and along said last mentioned streets to Whittier boulevard." The result of the change in the grade of Whittier boulevard, together with the improvement of that thoroughfare and of the land north of it as above-described, has been to cause this accelerated flow of storm and surface water thus brought onto Whittier boulevard to escape therefrom at the low points and thus to flow down Vancouver and Victoria avenues, to some extent onto the land of plaintiffs, and if not diverted, across the land of the defendant.

It is apparent from the evidence (nor is there any contention to the contrary) that the construction of the ditch, embankment, and fence by the defendant did not in any way detrimental to the plaintiffs, affect the flow of the surface or storm waters under the conditions which obtained at the time of their construction or until the completion of the various improvements above referred to. But in 1925, and after conditions had been changed as described in the portion of the findings from which we have quoted, there was a heavy fall of rain, and the water which poured into Whittier boulevard flowed south therefrom in Vancouver avenue "just like a river," as one witness expressed it. Defendant's ditch was utterly inadequate to the task of carrying off this torrent of water, and his embankment and fence presented an obstacle to its further southerly progress, and caused it to back up and to overflow plaintiffs' property, thereby causing considerable damage thereto. There was a recurrence of these conditions in 1926.

The appellant denies liability for the damage caused to respondents' property, and seeks a reversal of the judgment upon the theory that, as a matter of law, he was not required to receive surface waters in greater quantities or in a different manner than would occur under conditions such as existed prior to the improvements referred to and the consequent interference with the flow of such waters and the diversion and concentration thereof onto his property. Stated in different words, his contention is that he had a right to protect his property from the onslaught of waters which, under natural conditions, would not have been precipitated thereon.

[1, 2] It is thoroughly settled in California that the owner of the upper or dominant estate has a legal and natural easement or servitude in the lower or servient estate to discharge all surface waters naturally falling or accumulating on his land, upon or over the land of the servient owner in the manner in which they would naturally flow from a higher to a lower level, and that the owner of the lower estate is answerable in damages for any injury which may be caused to the upper estate by reason of obstructions which he has placed in the way of such natural flow, thus causing it to back up or remain on the land of the upper proprietor. Jaxon v. Clapp, 45 Cal. App. 214, 187 P. 69, 70; Board of Trustees v. Rodley, 38 Cal. App. 563, 177 P. 175, 176; Ogburn v. Conner, 46 Cal. 347, 13 Am. Rep. 213. In Heier v. Krull, 160 Cal. 441, 117 P. 530, 531, which is regarded as a leading case on the subject of surface waters, the rule is stated as follows: "Every landowner must bear the burden of receiving upon his land the surface water naturally falling upon land above it and naturally flowing to it therefrom, and he has the corresponding right to have the surface water naturally falling upon his land or naturally coming upon it, flow freely therefrom upon the lower land adjoining, as it would flow under natural conditions. From these rights and burdens, the principle follows that he has a lawful right to complain of others, who, by interfering with natural conditions, cause such surface water to be discharged in greater quantity or in a different manner upon his land, than would occur under natural conditions. This is the settled law of this state." In support of the above statement, the court cites a long array of earlier decisions.

On the other hand, a different rule applies in the case of flood waters. Such waters are regarded as "a common enemy, against which every man has a right to defend himself, regardless of the fact that the barriers he erects for the protection of his land may cause the flood to rise higher, or flow with greater force upon his neighbor." McDaniel v. Cummings, 83 Cal. 515, 23 P. 795, 797, 8 L. R. A. 575. This rule has been enunciated and applied in a number of cases, among which may be mentioned Lamb v. Reclamation District, 73 Cal. 125, 14 P. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 775; Sanguinetti v. Pock, 136 Cal. 466, 69 P. 98, 99, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169; Gray v. Reclamation District, 174 Cal. 622, 163 P. 1024; and Horton v. Goodenough, 184 Cal. 455, 194 P. 34, 35. A concise statement of the rules relating to the right to protect one's property from damage by water is found in the case last cited: "First, one has no right to obstruct the flow on to his land of what are technically known as surface waters. Heier v. Krull, 160 Cal. 441, and authorities therein cited at page 444, 117 P. 530, [531]. But by 'surface waters' are not meant any waters which may be on or moving across the surface of the land without being collected into a natural water course. They are confined to waters falling on the land by precipitation or rising thereon in springs. Putting it conversely, they do not include waters flowing out of a natural water course, but which yet were once a part of a stream and have escaped from it, 'flood waters' in other words. * * * Second, one has the right to protect himself against 'flood waters,' that is, waters of the character last described, and for that purpose to obstruct their flow on to his land, and this even though such obstruction causes the water to flow on to the land of another. * * * Third, one may not obstruct or divert the flow of a natural water course. But by a 'water course' is not meant the gathering of errant water while passing through a low depression, swale, or gully, but a stream in the real sense, with a definite channel with bed and banks, within which it flows at those times when the streams of the region habitually flow."

[3-5] In view of the different rules applicable in the respective cases of flood and surface waters, it is important that the nature of the waters involved in the present case be ascertained. Flood waters are those which escape from a stream or other body of water and overflow the adjacent territory. McDaniel v. Cummings, supra; Gray v. Reclamation District, supra; Horton v. Goodenough, supra. Surface waters are those which are produced by rainfall, melting snow, or springs, and which in the case of the two first-mentioned sources are precipitated, and in the case of the last-mentioned source, rise upon the land. See cases cited supra. Such waters are not divested of their character as surface waters by reason of their flowing from the land on which they first make their appearance onto lower land in obedience to the law of gravity. It is waters of this character that the lower or servient estate is bound to receive from the upper or dominant estate and the flow of which he may not obstruct to the detriment of the upper proprietor, provided their flow is a natural one. The upper proprietor may not divert by artificial means the surface waters upon his own lands to the lands of the lower proprietor, nor may he accelerate by means of ditches or increase the drainage of his own land to the injury of the lower owner. His right "is limited to the disposition of the water through the chosen channels of nature." Board of Trustees v. Rodley, supra.

[6] Tested by these definitions, it is evident that the water which came into Vancouver avenue from Whittier boulevard and hence onto the land of the plaintiffs, and the escape of which over the lands of defendant was prevented by the obstructions maintained by him, was surface water, caused by the rainfall on the land north of Whittier boulevard.

[7] It is significant that all of the decisions which state and apply the rule as to the duty of the lower proprietor to receive the surface waters flowing from the land of the upper proprietor relate to the natural flow thereof. Thus Heier v. Krull, supra, states the rule as follows: "Every landowner * * * has a lawful right to complain of others, who, by interfering with natural conditions, caused such surface water to be discharged in greater quantity or in a different manner upon his land than would occur under natural conditions,"—while in Jaxon v. Clapp, supra, it is enunciated: "The general rule is that where two adjacent parcels of land belong to different owners, one being lower than the other, and the surface water from the higher tract has been accustomed by a natural flow to pass over the lower tract, the owner of the higher land has an easement by virtue of which storm waters from such land may be permitted to flow onto the lower tract, which latter is charged with a corresponding servitude." And in Sanguinetti v. Pock, supra, the court said: "It is settled law in this state that plaintiff, as the owner of the upper land, has an easement over the lower adjacent land of defendant to discharge surface water as it is accustomed naturally to flow, and defendant had no right to interrupt such natural flow to plaintiff's injury." (Italics ours.) See, also, Board of Trustees v. Rodley, supra, and Rudel v. Los Angeles County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 P. 400. The court below found, as stated in the résumé of the facts at the beginning of this opinion, that the natural flow of the surface waters from the land north of Whittier boulevard, prior to the work done by the county on that street and to the subdivision and improvement of that territory was not onto or over the land of either of the parties to this action, but was across Whittier boulevard at points "several thousand feet easterly and * * * several hundred feet westerly of plaintiffs' property." It is contended by appellant that it was not the natural flow of the waters which he obstructed, but rather an unnatural flow caused by the interposition of forces set in motion by those whose grading, leveling, paving, and other works of improvement operated to divert the former course of the waters and caused them to find a new channel which carried them down Vancouver avenue and onto the land of the plaintiffs, and which, except for the obstructions, would have caused them to flow therefrom over the lands of the defendant. He argues that because of this fact the "common enemy" rule applicable to flood waters should be applied rather than the surface water rule. The fallacy of this argument is based upon a misconception of the meaning of the word "natural" as applied to the course taken by the run-off of surface water. It does not mean "original"; it has no necessary relation to the contour of the terrain or to the course taken by the flow prior to any alteration of either by the works of man or by changes due to the operation of the forces of nature. As the word is used in the discussion of questions relating to the reciprocal rights and duties of upper and lower proprietors with respect to surface waters, it has reference to that course which would be taken by such waters falling (or, in the case of springs, rising) on the land of the upper proprietor, or carried thereto from still higher land, and flowing or running therefrom onto the lands of the lower proprietor undiverted and unaccelerated by any interference therewith by the upper proprietor. As said in Larrabee v. Cloverdale, 131 Cal. 96, 63 P. 143, 145, "We may therefore construe the term 'natural channel' as including all channels through which, in the existing condition of the country, the water naturally flows;" and again, "For, by the necessarily great changes that must occur in the conformation of the country in the building of a city, the natural channels for the surface water are changed; and as the changes in the ground are inevitable and legitimate, and therefore natural, the new channels, through which, under natural laws, the surface waters are discharged, must also be regarded as natural."

If, then, surface waters which had formerly been carried off in a direction which took them to the right and to the left of plaintiffs' land without entering thereon were, by reason of the diversion thereof consequent upon the changed conformation of the country brought about by the making of the improvements hereinbefore described, cast upon plaintiffs' property, it was still the duty of the lower proprietor to receive such waters naturally flowing from plaintiffs' land onto his, provided, of course, that their flow was neither accelerated, diverted, or concentrated by any act of the plaintiffs. The rule as above stated is well illustrated in the case of Thomson v. La Fetra, 180 Cal. 771, 183 P. 152, 153, in which it was held that the "common enemy" rule applicable to flood waters cannot be invoked in favor of landowners who, to prevent injury to their lands from seasonal waters flowing from a cañon, erected an obstruction which turned the water onto the land of their neighbors, "since, the water not being in any sense flood water, the changing of its course and casting it upon other lands amounted to a trespass." The court there said: "The rule applicable to waters which are a 'common enemy' cannot be invoked under the facts of this case. That rule has application only to flood waters in the strict sense, that is to say, to waters escaping because of their height from the confinement of a stream and running over the adjacent country. The waters here involved are not of that sort. The water not being in any sense flood water, the defendants, by changing its course and casting it upon the lands of the plaintiff, were guilty of a trespass. The fact that the water may have threatened injury to the defendants affords no justification or excuse to palliate the wrong done. If the injury threatened to the defendants' lands was the result of wrongful artificial changes made by upper proprietors, resulting in an increased, accelerated, or concentrated flow of water upon and across the lands of the defendants, their remedy was to proceed by appropriate action against the wrongdoers to enjoin such changes or to have the nuisance abated, and not by an attempt to shift the burden of the wrong upon an innocent third party who but for their intervening willful act would have suffered no injury at all."

[8] That the defendant might have had relief as against those who caused the original diversion of the water is well established by such cases as Conniff v. San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45, 7 P. 41, Los Angeles Cemetery Association v. Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 P. 375, and Larrabee v. Cloverdale, supra. If, instead of pursuing the remedies available to him as against those whose acts were the proximate cause of the danger to his property he chose to protect it at the expense of his neighbor, he must answer for the injury he has thus done to the latter.

[9-11] Appellant's second point is that the judgment in the sum of $1,000 which was awarded plaintiffs in the court below "is excessive, and contrary to the evidence and not supported by admissible testimony." As to the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiffs, the case was apparently tried by both parties upon the theory that the proper measure of damages was the cost of repair, whereas the correct rule is that the measure of damages for injuries to real property is the difference, if any, in its market value before and immediately after the injury. Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50. No point is made as to the admission of evidence of repair cost as such; the sole contention being that the testimony of Mr. Le Brun, one of the plaintiffs, should not have been considered by the court in arriving at the amount of the damage, because cross-examination revealed the fact that he was not an expert contractor and that his figures were based largely upon estimates furnished him by others. His testimony was that the cost of repairing the house would be $800; that he had replanted shrubbery washed out or destroyed by the water, at a cost of $25, and replaced gravel washed from the driveway at a cost of $20; that the work done by himself in replacing the lawn washed away amounted to $64—making a total sum of $909. As to the $800 item, we are of opinion that appellant's point is well taken. An owner of property may, without being qualified as an expert on values, testify as to his opinion of the value of that which he owns. Hood v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 178 Cal. 150, 172 P. 594; Willard v. Valley Gas & Fuel Co., 171 Cal. 9, 151 P. 286. This rule, however, does not extend to the giving of testimony as to the cost of repairs, especially where such testimony is merely a repetition of the statements of other persons to the witness. But, if the testimony of Le Brun as to the cost of repairs to the house be eliminated from consideration, there is still left his undisputed testimony as to the other items, totaling $109, and there is also the testimony of witness Mongey, a carpenter, contractor, and builder of many years' experience, who testified that he had made an examination of the building for the purpose of making an estimate of the cost of repair and that it would be $750. The total amount testified to by Le Brun, exclusive of repairs to the house, added to the figure given by Mongey as the cost of such repairs makes a grand total of $859, or $141 less than the amount awarded. Appellant further urges that, even if the cost of repair as testified to by Mongey and Le Brun be deemed established, there is still a lack of evidence to support the finding of $1,000 damages. But, besides the items of damage above mentioned, there was evidence that during 1925 the plaintiffs were compelled to move out of their house on several different occasions, and to remain away from it for periods aggregating about a month in all, and that the same thing occurred again in 1926. According to the undisputed testimony of Le Brun, the rental value of the house was $35 or $40 per month. This deprivation of use would add at least $70 to the financial damage proven. Taking into consideration the actual discomfort and annoyance suffered by the plaintiffs, it would seem that the $71 allowed by the trial court in addition to the actual money loss proven was, to say the least, far from excessive.

[12] As to this element of damages the amount of compensation in dollars and cents is of course not susceptible of proof, it must be left to the sound discretion of the trial court, to be ascertained and adjudged after consideration of all the facts and circumstances established by the evidence in the case. As was said in Dauberman v. Grant, 198 Cal. 586, 246 P. 319, 321, 48 A. L. R. 1244: "It was not necessary to the recovery of damages caused by the nuisance of smoke and soot to prove actual damage to plaintiff's property. She was entitled to recover for the personal discomfort and annoyance to which she had been subjected, and it was a question for the trial court to determine the amount of the compensation which she should receive." To the same point are the decisions in Judson v. Los Angeles Suburban Gas Co., 157 Cal. 168, 106 P. 581, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 21 Ann. Cas. 1247, and Tuebner v. California Street Ry. Co., 66 Cal. 186, 4 P. 1162.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEWS PUB. CO. v. GUARDIAN THRIFT CO.
OF SUSANVILLE. (Civ. 3830.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 5, 1929.

1. Principal and agent ⇨123(7)—Evidence in action on accounts stated held insufficient to show ostensible authority in third party to bind defendant (Civ. Code, § 2317).

In action on accounts stated for price of printed forms, evidence showing defendant did nothing prior to giving of order and receipt of supplies to cause plaintiff to believe that third party had authority to bind it held insufficient to show ostensible authority in third party to bind defendant as defined by Civ. Code, § 2317.

2. Corporations ⇨448(2)—Corporation's using supplies under belief they were furnished by promoter in accordance with agreement held not ratification of promoter's unauthorized act in purchasing supplies for account of corporation.

Where corporation used supplies under belief that they were being furnished by promoter in accordance with his agreement and had no knowledge of unauthorized act in purchasing supplies for account of corporation, use of supplies held not to constitute ratification of promoter's unauthorized act.

3. Corporations ⇨448(1) — Promoter's acts prior to existence of corporation are not binding upon it, unless made so by act of incorporation or adopted by corporation.

Acts of promoters of corporation performed prior to existence of corporation are not binding upon it, unless made so by act under which incorporation took place or adopted by corporation after it comes into existence.

4. Accounts stated ⇨19(3)—Evidence in action on account stated held sufficient to support finding that there was not an account stated between parties.

In action on account stated, evidence held sufficient to support finding that there was not an account stated between parties.

5. Accounts stated ⇨3—Account stated requires that there be acknowledgment of previous indebtedness.

An account stated requires that there be an acknowledgment of a previous indebtedness, since such indebtedness constitutes consideration upon which new contract is based.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by the News Publishing Company against the Guardian Thrift Company of Susanville. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Hardy, of Susanville, for appellant.
J. E. Pardee, of Susanville, and G. C. Julian, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the amount alleged to be due on several stated accounts. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

There is little conflict in the evidence. Where it is conflicting, only the evidence which supports the findings and judgment will be stated. It appears that W. H. Tobin was engaged in promoting the organization of industrial loan corporations known as Guardian Thrift Companies. During the months of September and October, 1926, he was promoting the organization of such a corporation under the name of the Guardian Thrift Company of Susanville. About the middle of October, his stepson, G. B. Daniel, gave the plaintiff an order for printed forms for the defendant. The name "Guardian Thrift Company of Susanville" was not printed in any of the forms except the stock certificate book. The name printed in the other forms was "Guardian Thrift Company of ———." It does not appear by what authority Daniel placed the order for these forms, but he was not authorized to act for the defendant. November 6, 1926, Tobin made a written offer, directed to the "Organization Committee, Guardian Thrift Company, Susanville, California," in which he stated:

"As you are about to engage in the industrial loan business in Susanville, I take occasion to address you as follows:

"I own and control certain plans, designs, forms, working sheets and other data, especially adapted to the conduct and operation of the business in which you propose to engage. These plans, etc., are generally known as the Guardian Plan, and I make the following proposition:

"I will give you the full and exclusive use, for Lassen County, California, during your charter existence of all these said plans, designs, forms, etc., and all other data under my control, necessary for the proper conduct of your business. I will supply you, without expense to you, all forms, designs, plans, etc., in sufficient quantity to operate your company for the first twelve months. Thereafter said supplies will be furnished to you at net cost to me.

"I will furnish competent instructors to teach your employes how to properly handle and conduct your business in all its details; such instructors to be furnished at my expense and to remain without cost to your company until your employes are thoroughly competent to carry on the work.

"I will give you the supervision and advice, when requested and as hereinafter provided, without expense to you, as follows: I will furnish you with audits every three months from the date you begin business, for the period of one year, and thereafter, at your request, at the cost to me for said service. * * *

"In full remuneration for the above mentioned services and concessions, you shall constitute me as the fiscal agent for the sale of all the capital stock of your company and pay me twenty per cent of the selling price of the stock, payable as and when said stock is sold."

The offer was accepted by the "Organization Committee of the Guardian Thrift Company of Susanville" on the same day it was made. The defendant was incorporated November 10, 1926. Daniel went to Susanville some time in November to instruct J. B. Christie, the defendant's secretary and manager. The defendant received a permit to sell stock on November 30, and on December 2 it "opened the doors for business." Only a part of the printed forms were delivered; the remainder thereof being kept by the plaintiff for future delivery at Daniel's direction. The forms which were delivered "were received at the office of the (defendant) company either by Mr. Daniel or Mr. Tobin at some time, and probably * * * about the 6th or 7th of November," and "after the company was organized and went into operation those forms were used by the company." Daniel "never was an employee of the company. * * * He was the party that was furnished by Mr. Tobin under his contract to instruct Mr. Christie." He remained in the defendant's office almost constantly for three or four months. He instructed Christie "in the handling of the business of the office," and "in a general way" he and Christie "conducted the business of the office," including "the receipt and handling and answering of mail." Daniel "said he was supposed to be an auditor for his company." Among the things furnished by the plaintiff under Daniel's said order was a "binder for form 10." The defendant paid for it on the ground that it was not one of the things which Tobin had agreed to furnish. The plaintiff mailed bills to the defendant at Susanville, for parts of the forms printed, on November 17, 19, 23, and 29, and thereafter mailed statements of account twice a month during January and February, 1927. Thereafter the plaintiff received a letter, dated March 5, 1927, signed "Guardian Thrift Company, by C. B. Daniel," and stating: "In reply to your letter of the first instant. We regret the delay in cleaning up our account with you but you can be assured that same will be taken care of before the last of the present month."

The officers in charge of the defendant's business had no knowledge of the foregoing bills or statements or of the fact that Daniel had assumed to make the purchases for the defendant until early in April, 1927, after Tobin and Daniel had left, when a statement of account was received by the defendant.

The defendant immediately informed the plaintiff that it was not liable for the payment of the account, but that "under our contract with Mr. Tobin, who promotes and organizes such companies as ours, he is to pay for all advertising, all printing and furnish all forms for the first year."

[1] There is not the slightest evidence to show that Daniel had actual authority to order the supplies in question for the defendant. Appellant contends that he had ostensible authority to so order them. "Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes, or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Civ. Code, § 2317; 1 Cal. Jur. 739. The defendant did nothing, prior to the giving of the order and its receipt of the supplies, to cause the plaintiff to believe that Daniel had authority to bind it. The claim of ostensible authority therefore is without support in the evidence.

[2] Defendant's use of the supplies, under the belief that they were being furnished by Tobin in accordance with his agreement, did not constitute a ratification of Daniel's unauthorized act; the defendant having no knowledge of such act. 1 Cal. Jur. 777.

[3] Appellant seems to contend that the defendant is bound by the acts of Tobin, the promoter of the organization. Neither the defendant nor the persons who subscribed for its capital stock authorized Tobin to order or purchase supplies for it, but he agreed to furnish supplies of the kind in question at his own expense. "Acts of promoters performed prior to the existence of the corporation are not binding upon the corporation, unless made so by the act under which the incorporation took place or adopted by the corporation after it comes into existence." Biggart v. Lewis, 183 Cal. 660, 667, 192 P. 437.

[4, 5] There is ample evidence to support the finding that there was not an account stated between the parties. There is a disputable presumption that the defendant received the statements of account mailed to it by the plaintiff, but the court was not bound to find in accordance with the presumption against positive evidence to the contrary. Neither was there a previous indebtedness. "An account stated requires that there be an acknowledgment of a previous indebtedness, since such indebtedness constitutes the consideration upon which the new contract is based." 1 Cal. Jur. 190.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 26.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Nov. 26, 1929.

1. Adoption $\S$ 6—Contract for adoption of child was not dependent on consideration by surrender of some right by aunt negotiating contract.

Contract negotiated by aunt relative to adoption of her nephew was primarily for benefit of child, who was the real party in interest, and was not dependent on consideration by the surrender of some right by aunt in agreeing to adoption.

2. Specific performance $\S$ 114(4)—Allegations as to performance of services under contract for adoption stated cause of action for recovery of portion of estate.

Allegations of complaint seeking recovery of portion of estate by reason of contract for adoption held, in so far as relating to performance of services, to state a cause of action, especially in view of possibility of amendment.

3. Equity $\S$ 44—Suit in equity was not exclusive remedy for recovery of portion of estate by reason of alleged agreement for adoption.

Suit in equity was not exclusive remedy for recovery of portion of estate by reason of alleged agreement of adoption by deceased, in that the claim is not adverse to estate but in privity therewith, and claim depends on ability to establish equitable status as adopted child.

4. Courts $\S$ 200 $\frac{1}{4}$ —Probate court has power to pass on equitable issues involved in determining questions that may arise within its jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1664, 1665).

Probate court has power to pass upon equitable issues involved in determining questions that may arise within its jurisdiction, in accordance with provisions of Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1664, 1665, giving it the power and duty to determine heirship, all interests, and all claims of interest in estate, if they are not adverse thereto.

5. Executors and administrators $\S$ 314(3)—Hearing on petition for distribution could not be delayed until determination of suit involving claim to estate, under alleged agreement for adoption.

Hearing in probate court on petition for distribution of estate could not be delayed until determination of suit in equity involving claim to portion of estate by reason of alleged agreement for adoption, regardless of filing of affidavit in probate court setting forth fact that such suit had been filed.

6. Executors and administrators $\S$ 314(3)—Probate court had duty of determining what persons were entitled to residue as to which deceased died intestate and to make distribution accordingly (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1665).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1665, relating to distribution of residue of estate in hands of executor or administrator, probate court, where there was a residue in hands of executor as to which deceased died intestate, had duty of determining from evidence submitted at hearing for distribution what persons were entitled thereto, and to make distribution accordingly.

7. Mandamus $\S$ 31—Heir was entitled to writ of mandamus to require probate court to proceed to hear and pass upon petition for distribution.

Heir could maintain proceeding for writ of mandamus to require the superior court sitting in probate to proceed to hear and pass on petition for distribution of estate, in that refusal of trial court to hear matters involved in petition for distribution was a refusal to perform duty imposed upon it by law.

8. Mandamus $\S$ 26, 28—Mandamus cannot be used to interfere with proper exercise of discretion, but may be used to compel court to act within line of duty.

Writ of mandamus may not be used in any way to interfere with proper exercise of discretion in acting upon any matter before court, but may be used to compel a court to act in a matter within line of its duty.

9. Executors and administrators $\S$ 510(2)—Failure of probate court to act on petition for distribution did not authorize appeal (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963).

Failure of superior court sitting in probate to act upon petition for distribution of estate did not authorize an appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, in that an order refusing to postpone a decree of final distribution is not appealable, nor is an order postponing the consideration of a petition for such a decree.

Original application for a writ of mandamus by Christian Johnson for himself and for and on behalf of the other heirs of Edward Johnson, deceased, against the Superior Court in and for San Diego County, and Hon. L. D. Jennings, Judge of Department 3 thereof. Writ granted.

W. J. Mossholder and Harrison G. Sloane, both of San Diego, for petitioner.

Hamilton, Lindley & Higgins, of San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, J. Original petition for writ of mandamus. This is a petition asking that a writ of mandamus be issued to compel the superior court of San Diego county and Hon. L. D. Jennings, judge thereof, to proceed to hear and pass upon a petition for distribution in an estate.

It appears from the petition and the answer and return thereto: That Edward Johnson died in September, 1927, leaving a will disposing of about one-half of his estate to various legatees, while, as to the other half of said estate, he died intestate, and that all proceedings in the regular course of probate were had and taken in said court, including the filing of a final account and petition for distribution, and the estate was fully ready to be closed, except as herein set forth. That

In May, 1929, after the petition for distribution was filed, but before the same was heard, one Charles Erickson filed a complaint in the superior court of said county, which he denominates a complaint for specific performance and other equitable relief, and in which he alleges that he was born in Chicago, Ill., on May 26, 1873; that his father died in 1876, and his mother died in 1877, leaving him an orphan; that for some time prior to the death of his mother, and for a short time afterward, plaintiff was cared for by an aunt; that soon after the death of his mother, plaintiff, then an infant of about 4 years of age, was given by his aunt into the custody and control of the said Edward Johnson and his wife, who then and there agreed with the said aunt, in consideration of the surrender of plaintiff to their control and custody, and the release of all claims upon her part, that they would receive plaintiff into their home and legally adopt him as their own child, educate and maintain him, and give him the same rights and privileges as a natural child, including the right of inheritance; that pursuant to said agreement, plaintiff lived with the Johnsons as their son, and for many years was known, and is still known to many people, as Charles Johnson; that, until he grew to young manhood, plaintiff rendered unto the said Johnsons all the duties and devotion due parents from their children, and was in all respects treated as their natural son; that he was led to believe, and did believe, he was their legally adopted son; that, because of this belief, after he reached the age of maturity, he rendered to them the duties and obligations of a son to his parents; that he has fully performed the contract made on his behalf by his said aunt, but that no legal steps have ever been taken to adopt him according to law; that, after paying all bequests under the will of said Edward Johnson, and all costs and expense of administration, there remains a residue in cash and certain real property; that said Edward Johnson left neither issue, wife, father, or mother surviving him, but left a brother and sister and certain descendants of deceased brothers and sisters. Plaintiff prays that the agreement between the said Edward Johnson and the aunt of plaintiff be specifically enforced, and that he be adjudged to be the owner of all the property of Edward Johnson, deceased, remaining in the control of the executor and not disposed of by will; that the defendants be adjudged to hold the title thereof in trust for the plaintiff, and be required to convey to the plaintiff their several interests in said estate; that, in the event of their failure to do so, the clerk of the court be authorized to execute proper conveyances thereof; and that the executor be ordered to deliver to plaintiff all funds in his hands belonging to the estate; and that he be restrained from paying or delivering any of the funds or property of said estate to any of the defendants, pursuant to any decree of distribution which has been made, or which may be made. The executor is made a defendant, with allegations that, if not restrained, he will distribute and pay over to the other defendants the residue of said estate.

Before the decree of distribution in the estate of Edward Johnson came on for hearing, one of the attorneys for the said Charles Erickson filed, in the matter of said estate, an affidavit setting forth the fact that said suit by Charles Erickson had been filed; that the object of the action is to obtain a decree for specific performance of a contract of Edward Johnson, deceased, to adopt the plaintiff and to award that portion of the estate of deceased, amounting to approximately $40,000, to plaintiff; and that, until the determination of said action, no decree of distribution can be made in this estate. It further appears that, when said petition for distribution came on for hearing before the respondent court and judge, evidence was offered to show the persons who, by law, are entitled to the distribution of said estate; that said court and said judge declined and refused to pass upon such evidence, or to make any order settling such question or decreeing distribution; that said respondents refused and still refuse to proceed to ascertain the heirs of said deceased, or distribute the residue of the property to the heirs, or those entitled thereto.

The real issue involved in this matter is whether or not the pendency of such an action in equity, which is in fact one to declare the status of plaintiff to be that of an adopted child, empowers the superior court sitting as a court of probate to postpone distribution of an estate until said action has been decided. As bearing upon this main issue, four questions are raised and argued, which we will take up in order.

The first question is whether the complaint in the suit filed by said Charles Erickson shows any right of action at all. The petitioner argues that the complaint is fatally defective, in that it shows upon its face that it is barred by laches; that some 52 years had elapsed since the alleged making of the contract; that some 17 years elapsed before the plaintiff reached maturity, after which adoption was no longer possible, and more than 30 years have elapsed since plaintiff became of age; and that the action was begun after all other interested parties were dead. The respondents answer this contention by citing Furman v. Craine, 18 Cal. App. 41, 121 P. 1007. In this case the court held there was no laches in bringing the suit, since no cause of action accrued until the death of the foster parent, and the suit was brought within 2 years from that date. We are not satisfied that that decision is controlling in this case, since that case was one where the agreement was not only to adopt but to make the plaintiff an heir at law, so that she should inherit the property. In discussing this very point, the court calls attention to the fact that, under the agreement in that case, the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover the property from any devisee of the foster parent. In such a case as the one at bar, where there was no agreement that plaintiff should inherit or be given any property, and where plaintiff himself concedes that up to the moment of his death the said Edward Johnson had the full and absolute right to dispose of all of his property by will, there might well be a different holding in regard to laches. It might well be held that the contract was broken, not upon the failure to give him property at the time of Johnson's death, but upon the final failure to adopt the plaintiff, which occurred when he became of age. As to laches, see Stevenson v. Boyd, 153 Cal. 630, 96 P. 284, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525; Harris v. Hillegass, 66 Cal. 79, 4 P. 987; Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 P. 516. Respondents argue: "It is not the claim of an heir which we are seeking to enforce. It is the claim by one who might have been an heir had his contract been complied with, but who is entitled to complain and entitled to recover if he can prove his case because the decedent failed to take the steps which would have made him an heir and entitled to all the residue of the estate." If this be true, no agreement to make him an heir, other than an agreement to adopt him, being claimed, did not the breach occur, if at all, at the last opportunity to adopt the plaintiff? We mention this because we do not regard respondents' authority as conclusive in this matter, but, under the view we take of other portions of the case, we do not consider it necessary to decide the point.

[1] It is further urged that plaintiff's complaint shows no consideration, in that the aunt of plaintiff, with whom the contract is alleged to have been made, was not the guardian of the child, had no legal right to his support, society or services, and surrendered nothing whatever in agreeing to the adoption. We think, however, that, if such a contract was made, it was made primarily for the benefit of the child, who was the real party in interest, and that the aunt occupied a position which authorized her to act on behalf of the child, under the circumstances. Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 P. 432.

[2] It is also urged that there is a failure of consideration in that the performance of services on the part of the plaintiff are not sufficiently alleged. While the allegations in this regard are quite general and a part of them are conclusions, so far as collateral attack is concerned, and for the purpose of this action, we may assume that a cause of action is set up by the complaint, especially in view of the possibility of amendment. McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 211 P. 17; Mills v. Brown, (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 636.

[3] The next question is whether the superior court sitting in probate has jurisdiction to pass upon such a claim as is raised by the plaintiff Erickson, or whether his exclusive remedy is a suit in equity. In this connection, the respondents urge that the suit filed by Erickson is one, not to enforce the claim of an adopted child, nor even to enforce the right of adoption, but is one for the specific performance of a contract to adopt, and for relief by way of damages for the breach of said contract; the amount of damages being the amount left in the estate and in respect to which the deceased died intestate. It is urged that, until this action in equity is decided, it cannot be told whether or not there will be a residue in the estate subject to distribution. Respondents rely especially on the case of Furman v. Craine, supra, which they insist is similar to the case at bar. We do not so understand the case cited. In that case, the parents entered into a written contract with a widowed aunt of the child, in which the aunt agreed, in consideration of the relinquishment of all claims and rights by the parents, to adopt the child as her own, give her all the rights of a child in and to her estate, and make the child her heir at law, so that she would inherit the aunt's property upon the latter's death. The court particularly pointed out that the agreement was sufficient to have enabled the child to follow the property and recover it from a devisee, in the event the aunt had thereafter willed it to another.

Respondents cite many cases in California and in other states. As typical of these we may mention a few. Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 P. 710, 713, 33 L. R. A. 369, the first case along this line in California, was a case where it was sought to enforce specific performance of a contract to give all the property of an uncle to his niece. While the court held that the circumstances in that case did not permit the relief demanded, it was held that an agreement to dispose of property in a particular way was valid, if definite and certain. The court said: "Specific performance, as we have said, is not to be decreed under strict rule and formula. Every consideration which may properly be urged upon the court is to be weighed and passed upon, and it will be decreed only when no other adequate relief is available to plaintiff." In Steinberger v. Young, supra, the agreement relied upon was one not only to adopt and treat the plaintiff as a daughter, but also that the plaintiff should be an heir of the foster mother, and upon her death should receive all of her property. In Monsen v. Monsen, 174 Cal. 97, 162 P. 90, the court upheld the right to enforce a contract to make a particular disposition of property upon the death of the promisor, when the agreement is sufficiently definite and certain, but held that the particular circumstances in that case did not warrant relief.

[4] Respondents call attention to the fact that in all these cases, and many others, the procedure followed was that of a suit in equity, rather than taking steps for relief in any pending probate proceedings. It would seem, however, that there is a definite distinction between cases involving a contract under which a claimant has a definite right, existing before the death of the other party, to be given certain property, of which right he cannot be deprived, even by the will of the other party, and cases where the agreement is only one to adopt, and the other party is left free to dispose of his property as he chooses, either before death or by will. The latter is the case here; the claimant conceding that Edward Johnson retained until his death the full right to dispose of all of his property by will. It must be conceded that in those cases, where a stranger is claiming property adverse to the estate, and where, if the plaintiff prevails, the property will be taken away from the estate and will no longer be a part thereof, that the probate court has no jurisdiction, but that a separate action in equity must be filed for that purpose. Estate of King, 199 Cal. 113, 248 P. 519. A closer question is presented in those cases where the alleged contract was both to adopt and to give certain property to the claimant. In such a case there is sometimes an element in the claim adverse to the estate, which may, under some circumstances, make a court of equity a proper, if not an exclusive, forum. This fact, and the fact that sometimes the right to proceed with the probate proceedings is not insisted upon, may explain why the equity procedure was followed in the cases relied upon by respondents. But in the case at bar we have an alleged agreement to adopt alone, unmixed with any agreement to give property. The plaintiff, upon his own showing, had no rights in the property until the death of Edward Johnson. Since Johnson neither disposed of this portion of his estate, nor agreed to dispose of it, during his lifetime, the property is unquestionably a part of his estate. The plaintiff Erickson is claiming, not adverse to the estate, but in privity with it. Whether he relies on a right of inheritance through contract or on a right arising through a breach of the same contract, his claim depends upon his ability to establish his equitable status as an adopted son. Under such circumstances, we think a suit in equity is not necessary, and certainly is not an exclusive remedy. A probate court has the power to pass upon equitable issues involved in determining questions that may arise within its jurisdiction. More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 P. 1044, 66 P. 76; In re Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 P. 36. A probate court has the power and the duty to determine heirship, all interests, and all claims of interest in an estate, if these are not adverse to the estate. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1664, 1665; In re Burton, supra. We are of the opinion that the probate court has jurisdiction to pass upon any rights or interests in this estate claimed by plaintiff Erickson, and, by so holding, the plaintiff is not deprived of his right to a full hearing, since he has ample opportunity to present his claim, and have his rights passed upon, in the hearing on the petition for distribution in the estate mentioned.

[5] The third question is whether or not the hearing on the petition for distribution may be delayed until the determination of the suit in equity, filed by the plaintiff Erickson. The respondents contend that, in California the final distribution of an estate may always be postponed where there is litigation pending which might affect the final distribution of the estate. In support thereof is cited Estate of Ricaud, 57 Cal. 421; Estate of Colton, 164 Cal. 1, 127 P. 643; Estate of King, 199 Cal. 113, 248 P. 519; Estate of Ross, 180 Cal. 643, 182 P. 755, 757; Plass v. Plass, 121 Cal. 131, 53 P. 448; Estate of Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734. In Estate of Ricaud, an action in ejectment had been commenced against a decedent in his lifetime, and it was not known whether or not the estate owned the property. In Estate of Colton, the greater part of the assets of the estate consisted of a claim against a corporation, which was being litigated. In Estate of King reference was made to assets which might be taken away from an estate by a partner. In Plass v. Plass rights were involved which were derived from another source entirely. In Estate of Burdick there was involved money which it was claimed never belonged to the deceased. The case of Estate of Ross does not sustain the contention of respondents in this regard, but quite the contrary. The court there said: "The law contemplates that this proceeding thus properly instituted shall be carried on to decree of distribution as speedily as is reasonably practicable with due regard to the interests of all concerned, and any interested party appearing is entitled to have it so carried on."

The court held that distribution could not be delayed even to await the determination of a proceeding under section 1664, Code of Civil Procedure. The following is quoted with approval: "Where the circumstances are such that the questions involved may as readily be determined on a pending proceeding for distribution, there is no good reason for even postponing the hearing and determination of the distribution proceeding merely because a proceeding under section 1664 has been initiated."

The court held that the utmost effect that could be given to the contentions of the claimant was to treat them as a claim that she was an heir. That is the effect of the claim of plaintiff Erickson, that he is an equitable son and heir, and, since the question involved may as readily be settled at the hearing of the petition for distribution, no good reason appears for delaying that hearing.

None of the authorities mentioned support respondents' claim that a hearing on the petition for distribution may be postponed, under the circumstances of this case. Respondents seek to avoid the effect of this by the contention that this is, in reality, not an action to enforce a contract to adopt and thereby make him an heir, but that it is an action for damages for the breach of such a contract, but the gist of the action is his claim that he is, in equity, the son of the deceased. Even if his action be considered one for damages, no reason appears why he should be given a right in excess of that existing in an ordinary action for damages. He claims a benefit which practically amounts to the effect of a writ of attachment. He not only asks that a restraining order be entered at the conclusion of his suit as prayed for, but he appears by affidavit in the probate proceedings, in which he says he is not interested, and asks that all action there be suspended and the property preserved intact, to be made available to him in the event of his recovery at some future date, in his other action. Some interesting questions might arise, as, for instance, whether he has not such other remedy as will defeat his right to the issuance of a restraining order, and whether a superior court may temporarily restrain the same court sitting in probate from exercising its jurisdiction. Plaintiff apparently recognizes these difficulties, and does not even ask that the probate court be restrained from proceeding either temporarily or at the conclusion of the hearing in his suit in equity, but only asks that at the conclusion of the action an order be issued to restrain the administrator from paying over any money. In the meanwhile, no restraining order against any one having been issued, and without in any manner subjecting himself to any of the burdens that might be incumbent upon him in the usual issuance of a restraining order, and without any apparent authority in law for so doing, he attempts to hold up those proceedings in the probate court to which petitioner is otherwise entitled, by merely filing an affidavit setting forth the fact that he has filed in another forum an action the object and purpose of which "is to obtain a decree of specific performance of a contract * * * to adopt the plaintiff, * * * and to award that portion of the estate of Edward Johnson, deceased, * * * to the said Charles Erickson." The filing of this affidavit was not in accordance with any provision of law, cast no duty on the executor, nor on the court, to take any action thereon, and should not have been allowed to delay the hearing of the petition for distribution, when the estate was otherwise in condition to be closed. Estate of King, 199 Cal.

113, 248 P. 519. This is especially true when the claim set up by the affidavit is one in privity with the estate which fully recognizes the assets of the estate as belonging to the deceased up to the moment of his death, with the power of disposition, testamentary or otherwise, unimpaired, and when the claim must stand or fall by his right to be considered a son of the deceased although this right be equitable, rather than legal. He is not claiming hostile to the estate, or as a stranger to the estate, but his entire claim is dependent upon the fact that there is property rightfully in the estate, as to which the deceased died intestate, and which is subject to distribution to some one.

If the estate had already been distributed, a suit in equity might have been permissible on the theory that the distributees held in trust for the plaintiff. The estate not having been distributed, the plaintiff had a speedier remedy in the probate proceedings. If he has sufficient evidence to bear out his claim, no reason has been shown why this cannot be done at the hearing of the petition for distribution. Under such circumstances, a suit in equity, if proper at all, which we doubt, was certainly not an exclusive procedure. There was nothing before the trial court to prevent or delay this hearing upon the petition for distribution, and the refusal of the court to act at all upon said petition, one way or the other, interfered with a substantial right belonging to petitioner.

[6] Section 1665, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that on final distribution "the court must proceed to distribute the residue of the estate in the hands of the executor or administrator, if any, among the persons who by law are entitled thereto." It cannot be successfully disputed that there is a residue of an estate in the hands of this executor, as to which the deceased died intestate, and, this being so, we think it was the duty of the court to determine, from the evidence submitted at the hearing, what persons were entitled thereto, and to make distribution accordingly. In Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 P. 1078, 1079, the court said:

"The whole subject-matter of dealing with the estates of deceased persons is one of statutory regulation, and the policy and intent of our statute very clearly contemplates that property of decedents left undisposed of at death * * * shall, for the purposes of ascertaining and protecting the rights of creditors and heirs, and properly transmitting the title of record, be subjected to the process of administration in the probate court. Indeed, there is no other method provided by the statute whereby the existence of creditors or heirs of decedents may be conclusively established. And such administration may be initiated and had at the instance of any person entitled under the law to administer upon the estate. * * *

"Probate proceedings being purely statutory, and therefore special in their nature, the superior court, although a court of general jurisdiction, is circumscribed in this class of proceedings by the provisions of the statute conferring such jurisdiction, and may not competently proceed in a manner essentially different from that provided. * * *

"Moreover, and aside from the mere rights of appellant in the premises, the court, having assumed jurisdiction of the estate in a proper case, was without power to thus summarily dispense with the further administration of the estate, and refuse to further proceed therein."

We think the court had no more power to postpone a proceeding of this kind on the showing here made than it would have had to dispense with any further proceedings in the matter.

"If all debts and charges against the estate, including the expenses of administration, have been fully paid, and there is in the hands of the executor or administrator an ascertained balance of assets subject to distribution, the estate is ready for distribution, and distribution cannot be delayed. The Court 'must' proceed to make distribution. (§§ 1665, 1543, Code Civ. Proc.) The command of the law is, under such circumstances, peremptory. (Estate of Pritchett, 51 Cal. 568.)" Estate of Ricaud, 57 Cal. 421.

Even with reference to adverse claims, which the probate court has no jurisdiction to pass upon, the hearing of petition for distribution cannot be delayed to await the determination of prospective litigation. Estate of Ross, supra; Estate of King, supra. The reasons for the rule would be much stronger where the claim is not adverse to the estate.

[7-9] The one remaining question is whether the present proceeding for a writ of mandamus may be maintained by petitioner, or whether his only remedy is by appeal from the order of the court continuing the hearing of the petition for distribution. Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits an appeal from "a judgment or order * * * refusing, allowing or directing the distribution or partition of an estate, or any part thereof." The respondents argue that the court here did not decline to take jurisdiction, but merely exercised a discretion to postpone any action, until another suit was determined. The writ prayed for may not be used in any way to interfere with a proper exercise of discretion in acting upon any matter before the court, but it may be used to compel a court to act in a matter within the line of its duty. The court did not act here, either to refuse, or to allow, or to direct, any distribution, but merely failed to act upon the matter at all, and the writ prayed for was the only remedy left to petioner. An order refusing to postpone a decree of final distribution is not appealable. In re Burdick, 112 Cal. at page 396, 44 P. 734. Neither is an order postponing the consideration of a petition for such a decree. We are of the opinion that the trial court, in refusing to hear the matters involved in the petition for distribution, as alleged, declined to perform a duty imposed upon it by law. Hensley v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 541, 44 P. 232; French v. Superior Court, 3 Cal. App. 304, 85 P. 133.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandamus be issued to the respondents, requiring said court and said judge thereof to proceed as soon as the business of the court will permit to set for hearing the petition for distribution in the estate of Edward Johnson, deceased, and, after considering the evidence presented at such hearing, to render such judgment or order as may be proper under the evidence there produced.

SONSTELIE v. BUSH. (Civ. 7025.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 7, 1929.

Where plaintiff, before date of trial, had taken deposition of defendant, and on trial read such deposition, denial of defendant's motion for continuance made under Code Civ. Proc. § 594, relating to bringing issues to trial and proceeding with case, in absence of adverse party, held not to result in miscarriage of justice, where, if defendant had been present at trial, she could not have been of any assistance to her counsel in furnishing names of any witnesses, and could not have done more than to repeat testimony she had already given in her deposition.

2. Automobiles ⇨245(43)—Speed at which motorist was driving when striking pedestrian held for jury.

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, speed at which defendant was driving at time of striking plaintiff held for jury.

3. Automobiles ⇨246(50)—In action for injuries to pedestrian by automobile, instruction regarding duty to drive on right-hand side of highway held proper under evidence.

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by automobile, instruction regarding duty to drive on right-hand side of highway held proper, where evidence showed that at one point there was parked automobile, which rendered it impossible for defendant to drive on extreme right, but that at other points there was no such difficulty.

4. Damages $\S$ 210(2)—Instruction on damages for injuries terminating with statement damages could not be in excess of amount prayed for held proper, though plaintiff had asked for damages covering specific items and also for general damages.

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, instruction regarding elements of damage which plaintiff could possibly claim, terminating with statement that damages could not be "in excess of amount prayed for in his complaint, to-wit, sum of $30,480," held not error, though plaintiff had asked for damages covering certain specific items and also for general damages.

5. Automobiles $\S$ 245(72)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street held for jury.

Where plaintiff's witness testified that plaintiff approached edge of sidewalk, and, looking into street, stepped down and stepped back two or three times, and that later, turning his head to right and then to left, plaintiff attempted to cross street, and was struck by automobile, question of plaintiff's contributory negligence held for jury.

6. Evidence $\S$ 501(1)—Opinion as to speed of defendant's automobile held admissible, where witness stated facts on which opinion was based.

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, witness held properly permitted to give his opinion as to speed of defendant's automobile, where he testified as to facts on which he based his opinion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Jorgen Sonsteli against Lucille Bush for damages for personal injuries sustained in automobile collision. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover a judgment for injuries suffered in an automobile collision. The defendant answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

[1] The trial was held on October 4 and 5, 1928. Having obtained an order shortening time, counsel for defendant served and filed, on October 3, 1928, a notice of motion for a continuance. The motion was heard the morning of the trial. It was denied, and the defendant claims that the trial court erred in denying her motion. She cites and relies on the doctrine stated in such cases as Jaffe v. Lillenthal, 101 Cal. 175, 35 P. 636; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 P. 976; Betts Spring Co. v. Jardine M. Co., 23 Cal. App. 705, 139 P. 657; Swayne & Hoyt v. Wells-Russell & Co., 169 Cal. 204, 146 P. 686; Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Taylor, 52 Cal. App. 307, 198 P. 651; Estate of Stevens, 57 Cal. App. 160, 206 P. 668. She also lays stress on the fact that her motion was made under section 594, and not section 595, of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have carefully examined all of her authorities. As each case ordinarily is different in its facts, it is not surprising that no one of the authorities is directly in point. It is not even claimed that, because the defendant, a party, was absent, it was ipso facto necessary that the continuance be granted. Mission Film Corp. v. Chadwick Pictures Corp. (Cal. Sup.) 278 P. 855. Other facts must necessarily be taken into consideration. Before the date of the trial the plaintiff had taken the deposition of the defendant. On the trial the plaintiff read that deposition. In her deposition the defendant testified to facts showing that as she remembered the circumstances she was not guilty of negligence, and that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; that she was greatly excited by reason of the accident; that it was her first accident; that she did not inquire the names of the bystanders; that she took the plaintiff to the hospital; and that one of the bystanders accompanied her, but she did not know his name. From the facts contained in the record, it appears affirmatively that, if the defendant had been present at the trial, she could not have been of any assistance to her counsel in furnishing the names of any witnesses, and, furthermore, that she could not have done more than to repeat the testimony that she had already given in her deposition. After an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, this court is unable to say that the ruling complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2] The defendant asserts there is no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. There is some conflict in the testimony as to the exact spot where the accident occurred; however, it was in, or within a very few feet of, the intersection of Thirtieth street and Grove street in the city of Oakland. There was evidence to the effect that immediately prior to the collision the defendant was driving 40 miles an hour. It was certainly a question for the jury to determine how fast she was driving at the exact time of the impact.

As just stated, it was a close question as to whether the collision occurred within the intersection of Thirtieth and Grove streets or a little before. The trial court gave an instruction covering section 125, subd. (c), of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 557). It may not be said that the instruction was inapplicable to the evidence.

[3] The trial court gave an instruction regarding the duty to drive on the right-hand side of the highway. The defendant assigns it as error. From the evidence introduced it is clear that at one point there was a parked automobile which rendered it impossible for the defendant to drive on the extreme right. At other points there was no such difficulty. No facts are quoted showing that the instruction complained of was not pertinent to the case as made by the plaintiff.

[4] The trial court gave an instruction regarding the elements of damage which the plaintiff could possibly claim, and the instruction terminated with the statement that the damages could not be "in excess of the amount prayed for in his complaint, to-wit, the sum of $30,480." In his complaint the plaintiff had asked for damages covering certain specific items and also for general damages. The defendant complains because the trial court did not instruct the jury that each claim for specific damage must be limited to the amount alleged, and that the general damage must be limited to the amount alleged as general damage. She did not ask for such an instruction, but she cites and relies on two cases from Missouri and one from Texas. Houston Electric Co. v. Green, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 242, 106 S. W. 463; Shinn v. United Rys. Co., 146 Mo. App. 718, 125 S. W. 782; Dunham v. Miller, 154 Mo. App. 314, 133 S. W. 675. Conceding that those cases support the argument of counsel, it is clear that they are not followed at home nor abroad at the present time. Missouri, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. Collins, 47 Okl. 761, 150 P. 142, 147, 148.

[5] It is asserted the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. If we examine the record, that claim may not be sustained. The plaintiff called as a witness H. A. Breasing. Among other things, that witness testified that he stood watching the plaintiff, that the plaintiff approached the edge of the sidewalk, and, looking into the street, stepped down and stepped back two or three times, and that later, turning his head to the right and then to the left, the plaintiff attempted to cross the street. If the jury believed his testimony, they were entitled to act thereon, and the question of contributory negligence was not merely a question of law.

[6] When the witness Breasing was on the stand, he was asked how fast the defendant was driving her automobile. He replied he did not know, but he had an opinion. Other questions were asked regarding what that opinion was based on. He answered each of those questions, and then was asked what the speed was. The court did not err in allowing him to answer the latter question.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

MAUCK v. NORTHWESTERN NAT. INS. CO. OF MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Civ. 3969.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 11, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨197(7)—Contention for first time on appeal by insured that answer did not raise defense under vacancy clause in fire policy held too late, where case was tried on contrary theory.

In action upon fire insurance policy, where case was tried on theory that vacancy clause of policy was an issue in case, contention on appeal by insured for first time that insurer's answer was insufficient to raise issue on defense under vacancy clause held too late.

2. Insurance ⇨146(1)—Construction of insurance policy is governed by rules which usually control other contracts.

Insurance policy is contract between insured and insurer, and its construction is governed by rules which usually control other contracts.

3. Insurance ⇨323(1)—Under vacancy clause in fire policy, proof of unoccupancy for year and at time of fire precludes recovery, in absence of waiver or consent to vacancy.

Where fire insurance policy specifically provides that building is insured while occupied only for dwelling house purposes, and that insurer shall not be liable for loss while it is vacant or unoccupied without permission indorsed on policy, proof that for year before and at time of fire no one lived in house is fatal to recovery, in absence of insurer's waiver or consent to vacancy.

4. Insurance ⇨323(3)—Term "vacant" or "unoccupied" used in fire policy with reference to dwelling house implies it must be used and occupied by individuals as their residence; "dwelling house."

Term "vacant" or "unoccupied," used in fire insurance policy with reference to dwelling house, implies that it must be used and occupied by individuals in good faith as their residence in order to validate policy, and proof of vacancy or unoccupancy is sufficient to defeat recovery, since dwelling house is chiefly designed for abode of mankind (citing Words and Phrases, Third Series, "Dwelling House").

5. Insurance ⇨323(3)—Temporary use of room for storing workmen's tools does not constitute "occupancy" within vacancy clause in fire policy.

Mere temporary use of room for storing workmen's tools used in process of moving house does not constitute "occupancy" within fire insurance policy providing that insurer shall not be liable for loss occurring while building is vacant or unoccupied for specified period.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Occupancy; Occupation; Occupy (of Land).]

6. Insurance ☞323(3)—Altering, repairing, or moving building does not constitute "occupancy" within fire policy when no one actually resides in house.

When no one actually resides in house, altering, repairing, or process of moving building does not constitute occupancy within fire insurance policy.

7. Insurance ☞646(5)—Insurer having established vacancy rendering inoperative fire policy, insured had burden to show he was released from obligation imposed by vacancy clause.

Where dwelling house was vacant rendering inoperative fire policy, insured held to have burden to show he was released from obligation imposed by vacancy clause permitting house to remain vacant and unoccupied for unlimited time if located within incorporated city or town, or that it remained vacant by insurer's written permission or for any other legally excusable cause.

8. Insurance ☞323(1)—Dwelling in city located within duly authorized fire protection district held not within incorporated city under vacancy clause in fire insurance policy (St. 1923, p. 431).

Dwelling located in city included within duly organized fire protection district, under provision of St. 1923, p. 431 (1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2583), held not located within duly incorporated city or town rendering inapplicable vacancy clause in fire insurance policy, providing that, if building is located within incorporated limits in city or town, dwelling may remain vacant or unoccupied without any limitation as to time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by W. M. Mauck against the Northwestern National Insurance Company of Milwaukee, Wis. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Winslow P. Hyatt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. W. Hindman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. The appellant's assignors and grantors owned a house and lot in the unincorporated city of Graham, in Los Angeles county. The dwelling house was insured by the owners for $2,500 against loss by fire. The policy contained the following condition: "Unless otherwise provided by agreement endorsed hereon * * * this company shall not be liable for loss or damage occurring * * * while mechanics or artisans are employed in building or altering or repairing the described premises for more than fifteen days at any one time * * * or while a building herein described whether intended for occupation by owner or tenant is vacant or unoccupied beyond the period of ten consecutive days."

The policy also contained an exception to the foregoing release from liability for loss by fire which occurred while the building was unoccupied. This clause provided that: "If the building described hereunder is located within the incorporated limits of a city or town, permission is hereby granted for the same to remain vacant or unoccupied without limit of time."

On July 10, 1924, the building was destroyed by fire. It had been unoccupied for a year prior to the fire. The owners lived elsewhere, and it was not rented to others. Men were engaged in moving the house to another lot. The building was not being altered or repaired. The doors and windows of the house were barricaded, except that the workmen kept their house-moving implements in one of the empty rooms during the time they were unemployed. The house had been raised and placed upon stringers and rollers preparatory to moving it. In the absence of the workmen, at night, during this process of moving, the house burned. Due proof of loss by fire was made, and payment was refused. This suit was thereupon instituted. The court found that the house was burned while it was vacant; that it had been unoccupied for a year prior thereto; that no permission for vacancy had been granted or indorsed on the policy; that it was not in the process of repairing at the time it was burned and that the property was not located in an incorporated city or town. Judgment was rendered for the defendant, and this appeal was perfected.

The appellant seeks a reversal upon the grounds that (1) the pleadings admit the fulfillment of the contract of insurance in every respect by the insured, (2) the vacancy clause of the policy was inapplicable because the city where the building was located, in effect, was incorporated, and, (3) the building was in the process of being repaired and was occupied by the workmen who were engaged in moving it at the time of the fire.

[1] The complaint alleges that the insured "duly performed all agreements and conditions of said policy required to be performed by them." The answer merely denied that the insured "duly performed all of the agreements or conditions of said policy." In an affirmative defense, however, the answer quoted the foregoing vacancy clause of the policy, and alleged that the dwelling house had been unoccupied for a year prior to and was vacant at the time of the fire. The affirmative allegations of the answer sufficiently raised the issue concerning the occupancy of the building. This was the chief issue at the trial. Evidence upon this subject was adduced without objection on the part of the appellant. The question of the insufficiency of the denials of the answer was not raised at the trial. The case was tried on the theory that the vacancy clause of the policy was an issue. It is too late to raise this question for the first time on appeal.

[2-4] An insurance policy is a contract between the insured and insurer, and its construction is governed by the rules which usually control other contracts. 14 Cal. Jur. 416, § 5. Where an insurance policy specifically provides, as it does in the present case, that the building is insured "while occupied only for dwelling house purposes," and that the company "shall not be liable for loss" while it is "vacant or unoccupied beyond the period of ten consecutive days," without permission therefor indorsed on the policy, proof of the fact that for a year before and at the time of the fire no one lived in the house is fatal to recovery, in the absence of waiver or permission therefor on the part of the insurer. 4 Joyce on Insurance, 3783, § 2225. Where the term "vacant" or "unoccupied" is used in an insurance policy with reference to a dwelling house, it implies that it must be used and occupied by individuals in good faith as their residence in order to validate the policy. "A dwelling-house is chiefly designed for the abode of mankind." Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 167, 39 Am. Rep. 644; 3 Words and Phrases, Third Series, page 101. Proof of the fact that the dwelling was either vacant or unoccupied is sufficient. 4 Joyce on Insurance, 3784, § 2225. The vacancy provision of a policy is obviously intended as a precaution against carelessness and an increased risk which accompanies an unoccupied house which may thereby become the resort of tramps and lawless individuals. As the court says in the case of Moore v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 64 N. H. 140, 6 A. 27, 32, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384, under protection of the usual vacancy clause, the insurer is entitled to insist upon "a practical occupancy consistent with the purposes or uses for which they were insured. * * * An occupancy that measurably lessens the vigilance and care that would be incident to its use for such purpose is not an occupancy within the meaning of the term.

[5] Under the evidence in the present case the dwelling house was clearly "vacant and unoccupied." The mere temporary use of a room for storing workmen's tools used in the process of moving the house does not constitute occupancy in the sense contemplated by the policy. In the case of Halpin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 165, 23 N. E. 482, 484, it is said: "A dwelling-house, to be in a state of occupation must be the customary abode of human beings. * * * The house must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. Herrman v. Insurance Co., 85 N. Y. 162 [39

Am. Rep. 644]; Cummins v. Insurance Co., 67 N. Y. 260 [23 Am. Rep. 111]." In 1 May on Ins. 504, § 249c, the author, quoting from Litch v. N. B., etc., Ins. Co., 136 Mass. 491, says: "A house that remains three months vacant and is then let to a tenant who up to the (time of) loss has done nothing but put into it implements for cleaning is unoccupied within the meaning of the policy."

[6] When no one actually resides in a house, altering, repairing, or the process of moving the building does not constitute occupancy. Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co., 90 Iowa, 709, 57 N. W. 626, 23 L. R. A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468; 4 Joyce on Insurance, 380, § 2330.

[7] Nor was this vacancy provision of the policy inoperative for the reason that the house was located "within the incorporated limits of a city or town." The vacancy of the house having been established, the burden rested on the plaintiff to show that his grantors and assignors were relieved from the obligation imposed by the vacancy clause of the policy, by virtue of the fact that the house was located within an incorporated city or town; that it remained vacant by written permission of the insurer or for any other legally excusable cause. There was no evidence that the city of Graham, where the house was located, was an incorporated city or town at the time of the fire. The appellant does not assert that it was ever incorporated. All that he contends is that it was included within a duly organized "fire protection district" under the provisions of the Statutes of California of 1923, page 431 (1 Deering's Laws of 1923, Act 2583), and that this organization fulfilled all the requirements within the spirit and intent of the policy which exempts the application from the vacancy clause when the house was situated in an incorporated city or town.

[8] We cannot agree with this construction of the contract. It may not be said that a policy which requires a dwelling house to be located in an incorporated city or town in order to exempt it from the vacancy clause is fulfilled by its location in an organized fire protection district. It may reasonably be presumed that an incorporated city will be provided with police protection, an organized fire department, and other means of minimizing the danger of fire from lawlessness and vandalism, which protection may not be afforded in an unincorporated town, even though it be included in a duly organized fire protection district.

The judgment and findings are adequately supported by the evidence, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

RYAN v. SHANNAHAN et al. (Civ. 5658.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Principal and surety §59—Surety cannot be held beyond express terms of his contract.

Liability of surety is measured and bounded by terms of his contract, beyond express terms of which he cannot be held.

2. Railroads §111—Rental and transportation of shovel used for railroad construction work held not within surety bond for payment of all persons "performing labor or furnishing material" in construction work.

Where owner furnished contractor gasoline shovel, to be used by contractor in railroad construction work, for which contractor agreed to pay certain rent, rental and expense of transportation of shovel back to place where rented held not within terms of surety bond, for payment of all persons performing labor or furnishing material used in construction work.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Charles B. Ryan against Charles Edward Shannahan, doing business under the firm name and style of C. E. Shannahan & Co., and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last-named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Joe Orider, Jr., and Clarence B. Runkle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andreani & Haines and John L. Bisher, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Defendant Shannahan, who is not a party to this appeal, entered into a written contract with the Blue Diamond Company to do the grading for a branch railroad line to be constructed in Nevada for said corporation, whereby he obligated himself to furnish "all necessary material, superintendence, labor, tools, plant, equipment, and transportation" in connection with the work to be done. The "general conditions," which were attached to and made a portion of this contract, required the contractor to deliver to the corporation a surety company bond "as security for the faithful performance by the contractor, * * * as well as for the payment in full of all claims of all persons performing labor upon, or furnishing materials to be used in, said work." Pursuant to this requirement Shannahan procured defendant appellant Fidelity & Deposit Company to execute, together with himself, as principal, a bond in the sum of $15,000 "to be paid to the said Blue Diamond Company," conditioned upon performance of the contract by Shannahan and his payment in full of "claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing material to be used in such construction work."

A couple of days prior to the execution of the contract with the corporation, Shannahan had entered into another written agreement with the plaintiff respondent, whereby the latter rented to him a gasoline shovel, which he used in the performance of his work under the grading contract. The rental agreement provided for monthly payments for the use of the shovel and required Shannahan to return it to respondent at Los Angeles, paying all transportation charges. This action was brought against Shannahan and the appellant, surety company, to recover a balance claimed to be due on the rental, together with transportation charges for the return of the shovel to respondent, which the latter was compelled to pay because of Shannahan's failure to do so. Judgment went in favor of plaintiff in the court below as against both defendants, from which judgment the surety company alone appeals; the sole question presented being whether or not the surety company is liable on the bond.

[1, 2] The liability of a surety is measured and bounded by the terms of his contract, beyond the express terms of which he cannot be held (Civ. Code, § 2836; Braun v. Crew, 183 Cal. 728, 192 P. 531; San Luis Obispo County v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 562, 41 P. 445; and cases cited in 23 Cal. Jur. at page 1024), and on the very terms of which he is entitled to stand (County of Glenn v. Jones, 146 Cal. 518, 80 P. 695, and cases above). We are of the opinion that the rental of machinery does not come within the terms of the condition for the payment of "all persons (1) performing labor upon, or (2) furnishing material to be used in, such construction work." It can neither be said that, by renting the shovel to the contractor, respondent himself performed labor upon the construction job, nor that, in so doing, he furnished any material to be used therein. In support of the judgment appealed from respondent relies upon several cases in which persons furnishing supplies, machinery, etc., for the use of a contractor in connection with the performance of his contract have been held entitled to recover as against the contractor's bondsmen on the bond given for faithful performance. An analysis of these cases will demonstrate that each falls within one or the other of two classes: Either the bond was conditioned on the payment of the claims of those furnishing supplies or machinery or materials used in connection with the work, as distinguished from materials, etc., to be used in the work, meaning actually entering into and becoming a part of the structure or improvement itself, or else the bond was given pursuant to the requirement of some statute, such as section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a lien in favor of those "furnishing appliances * * * contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, etc., of the structure or other improvement by the contractor. In the latter case the provisions of the statute are deemed incorporated in the bond "as effectually as if such obligation were in words inserted in it." State v. Nutter, 44 W. Va. 385, 30 S. E. 67, 68, quoted in Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 181 P. 779. To the same effect are the decisions in Los Angeles Stone Co. v. National Surety Co., 178 Cal. 247, 173 P. 79, Hansen v. Martin, 63 Cal. 282, Heynemann v. Eder, 17 Cal. 433, Board of Supervisors v. Bird, 31 Cal. 66, and Hub Hardware Co. v. Aetna Accident & Liability Co., 178 Cal. 264, 173 P. 81.

As falling within the first of the classes above referred to may be noted the case of French v. Farmer, 178 Cal. 218, 172 P. 1102, in which the bond was conditioned upon the payment by the contractor of all "persons who shall supply such contractor with provisions or goods of any kind." In that case it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the surety company for hay and barley sold to the contractor and consumed by the stock used on a road construction job, but that the terms of the bond did not warrant recovery for rental of teams employed in and about the work. The second class of cases is typified by Sherman v. American Surety Co., 178 Cal. 286, 173 P. 161, in which the contract was for the construction of wells for the city of Long Beach, and the bond was given pursuant to the provisions of a statute requiring the contractor on any public work to file a bond which "must provide that, if the contractor * * * fails to pay for any materials or supplies furnished for the performance of the work" the surety will do so. St. 1897, p. 201. There the plaintiff recovered for the rental to the contractor of tools used in drilling the wells and for the cost of transporting them to the place where used on the theory that they were supplies furnished for the performance of the work as distinguished from materials used in and going to form a part of the structure itself.

An example of those cases which may be said to belong to both of the above-mentioned classes is Bricker v. Rollins & Jarecki, 178 Cal. 347, 173 P. 592, 594, in which the road construction work was done and the bond given under the act of 1897, supra, and where the bond itself was conditioned on the contractor's payment for supplies furnished. The court there held that the rental of animals or machinery, while it might not, in the strict sense, be embraced in the definition of the word "materials," was fairly to be included within the meaning of the "more comprehensive word 'supplies.'" This word the court thus defined: "The ordinary meaning of this term in its general and accepted use is such as to include goods, wares, and merchandise of almost every kind and nature, whether used in the household or on the farm, or in any sort of productive or construc-

Bearing in mind the rule that the statutory provisions are to be read into a bond given pursuant to a statute, light is thrown upon the problem under discussion by the cases involving section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the liens of mechanics and others and liability on bonds given pursuant to that section.

As this section stood prior to its amendment in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), it accorded a lien to persons "performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in" the construction, etc., of buildings and other classes of structures enumerated in the section. It did not, as it has done since such amendment, extend the benefits of such liens to those "bestowing * * * other necessary services, * * * or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction. * * *" In Wood, Curtis & Co. v. El Dorado Lumber Co., 153 Cal. 230, 94 P. 877, 878, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585, 126 Am. St. Rep. 80, 15 Ann. Cas. 382, decided with reference to section 1183 as it read prior to the amendment of 1911, the question was squarely presented as to whether or not one who had rented horses and harness to a contractor for use in connection with a railroad construction job came within the category of a person "performing labor upon, or furnishing materials to be used in" the construction work. Determining this question and referring to the claimant the court said:

"He occupied no contractual position whatsoever touching the work. He had merely turned over to the contractor, under a contract of hiring, certain personal property which the contractor himself used upon the work. The fact that the personal property which was so turned over consisted of horses and their harness should not be allowed to cloud the issue. The horses, as horses, were no more entitled to liens than were the harnesses themselves. Each and both together were but convenient appliances for the doing of specific work. In the ultimate analysis there is no difference in principle whether draying is done by horses and wagons, or by automobile trucks; whether grading is done by horses and scrapers, or by traction engines and steam paddies. One and all are in their essence but tools and machinery. This being so, if the ruling for which respondent contends is the correct one, it must result that, if A leases to B a derrick or hoist for use upon the buildings which B is constructing, A will have a lien upon each of those buildings for the value of the use of the derrick; or, in still simpler form, if a carpenter lets to a fellow carpenter his chest of tools for 50 cents a day, the former will have a lien upon every building upon which the latter works and uses the rented tools. The illustration, reduced to its simplicity, shows the untenableness, if not the absurdity, of the contention. Giving to the law its broadest and most beneficent construction, it can never be said that one who merely rents appliances to another who labors upon a structure has himself bestowed labor upon that structure within the meaning of our law."

Again, in Gordon Hardware Co. v. San Francisco & San Rafael Railroad Co., 86 Cal. 620, 25 P. 125, it was held that picks and shovels furnished for a railroad construction job were not the subject of a mechanic's lien. To the above judicial definitions of the expression "performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in," which is the language of, and a limitation on the liability with regard to, the bond here in suit, may be added that in City of Los Angeles v. Kautz, 39 Cal. App. 702, 179 P. 716, where it was held that "section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for a 'withhold notice' by any of the persons mentioned in the preceding sections, is limited in its terms to those who have 'performed labor or furnished materials,' and does not include a person who rented to a contractor a steam shovel to be used in the performance of public work, who, if the work had been on private property, would have had a lien under section 1183 of the same Code." It was there said:

"The principal question here turns upon the construction to be given to sections 1183 and 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant's contention is that section 1184 is not limited to persons who furnish labor or materials for the work, but that, on the contrary, it includes one who furnished the contractor a steam shovel to be used in the performance of the work. If the contract had been for work to be done upon private property, and if appellant were endeavoring to enforce a lien upon that property for the amount due him for the use of the steam shovel, we do not doubt that his claim would come within the provisions of section 1183, as amended in 1913. It is there provided, among other things, that all persons furnishing appliances, teams, and power contributing to the construction or repair of a wagon road shall have a lien upon the property for the value of the use of such appliances, teams or power. Section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that 'any of the persons mentioned in the preceding sections, except the contractor, may at any time give to the owner a notice that they have performed labor or furnished materials, or both, to the contractor,' stating certain specified facts concerning the claim. 'Upon such notice being given it shall be lawful for the owner to withhold, and in case of property which, for reasons of public policy or otherwise, is not subject to the liens in this chapter provided for, the owner or person who contracted with the contractor, shall withhold from his contractor sufficient money due or that may become due to such contractor to answer such claim and any lien that may be filed therefor including the reasonable cost of any litigation thereunder.' These provisions of section 1184 were originally enacted prior to the time when section 1183 was so amended as to include a lien for the value of the use of such appliances, teams, or power. Notwithstanding that other amendments have been made to section 1184, the Legislature did not see fit to extend the terms thereof describing the instances in which by giving said notice an equitable lien may be imposed upon the money due or to become due to the contractor. In 1909 a section numbered 1183a was added to the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it was provided that such persons so supplying power might give written notice of the same character and effect as that which persons so furnishing materials are entitled to give, as provided in section 1184 of that Code. Section 1183a was repealed in the year 1911. It is clear that the right here claimed by appellant cannot be sustained, unless it exists under the terms of section 1184, to which we have referred. Those provisions, however, are in terms limited to those who have 'performed labor or furnished materials' used in the work of construction and have not been extended so as to include a claim and notice of the kind here relied upon by appellant."

It is to be noted that this case was decided after the amendment of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The instant case does not, of course, arise under the mechanic's lien law or any other statute of this state, since the work was to be performed in another state; but the decisions we have referred to are of value as defining the very language of the bond here involved. As so defined we are of the opinion that it does not render the surety liable for the rental of the gasoline shovel used in the railroad construction job or for the expense of transporting it back to Los Angeles.

ECHOLS v. ECHOLS et al. (Civ. 3920.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

1. Husband and wife $\Rightarrow$ 264—Evidence showed that husband, by conveying to wife his interest in community property, lost all interest therein, and property became separate property of wife (Civ. Code, § 164).

In action to quiet title brought by husband against wife, and involving property originally acquired with community funds and taken in names of both, evidence held to show that husband, by deed to wife conveying all his interest in such property, lost all interest therein, and that title was thereby vested in wife as separate property, especially under Civ. Code, § 164, as against husband's contention that property retained character as community property even after his conveyance.

2. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 1010(1)—Findings supported by evidence are conclusive.

Where a case presents only question of fact and there is abundant evidence in record to support findings of trial court, such findings are conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action to quiet title by William Echols against Mary B. Echols and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Irving S. Baltimore and Luke J. McNamee, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff, William Echols, brought this action against his wife and daughter to quiet title to two lots situated in the city of Glendale. Judgment was entered in favor of his wife and daughter, and he has appealed.

[1, 2] The property in controversy was acquired by the said William Echols and Mary B. Echols, his wife, on March 2, 1906, with community funds, and the deed was taken in the names of "Mary B. Echols and William Echols, her husband." The title stood in both names until April 9, 1910, on which date the said William Echols made, executed, and delivered to his wife, Mary B. Echols, a grant deed conveying all of his interest in said property to her. Said deed was in the usual form, and contained no reservations whatever, and recited a consideration of "love and affection, which the said party of the first part (William Echols) has and bears unto the said party of the second part (Mary B. Echols); as also for the better maintenance, support, protection and livelihood of said party of the second part. * * *

Since the execution of this deed, the property has at all times stood of record in the name of the said Mary B. Echols, and she has had exclusive control and management of the same, and paid all taxes levied or assessed against the same; except, that on the 15th day of July, 1923, Mary B. Echols conveyed a portion thereof to her daughter, Della Echols, one of the defendants and respondents herein. Della Echols has remained the owner and in possession of the property conveyed to her ever since she received the conveyance from her mother.

This action was commenced by William Echols on April 21, 1925, which was over fifteen years after he had conveyed the property to his wife.

The theory and contention of the appellant seems to be that, although he conveyed the property to his wife on April 9, 1910, nevertheless said property retained its character as community property. This contention is entirely without merit.

Section 164 of the Civil Code provides, in part: "Whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property."

Added to this presumption, which is itself evidence, is the positive testimony of Mary B. Echols, that her husband made her a gift of this property. The testimony of appellant himself shows that, at the time he made, executed, and delivered said deed to his wife, he knew exactly what he was doing and intended at said time to vest the title to said property in his wife, and desired to make a gift of it to her, but contends that, after the deed was executed, Mrs. Echols promised him that the property would be as much his as hers, and that Mrs. Echols should hold the property in trust for him, etc.

Mrs. Echols and Mr. Echols were the only two witnesses who testified relative to the execution and delivery of the deed, and upon the testimony adduced, the trial court found in favor of Mary B. Echols upon all of the issues and found that the property was her sole and separate property, and that, when said deed of April 9, 1910, was made to her by the said William Echols, he intended to make her a gift of the property, and it thereby became her separate property. There is no reason shown in the record why this finding of the trial court should be disturbed. The case, in its last analysis, presents only a question of fact, and there is abundant evidence in the record to support the findings of the trial court; in fact, from the record presented, it is difficult to conceive how any other conclusion could have been reached by the trial court. In such a case, the trial court's findings are conclusive on appeal, and we are powerless to interfere.

In view of the evidence and the findings, the other questions argued by the appellant become wholly immaterial and need no particular discussion.

We strongly suspect, from an examination of the entire record, that this action was instituted, and this appeal taken, for the sole purpose of harassing the defendant Mary B. Echols.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. When the issues of fact in this case were ready for trial upon amended pleadings, the department of the superior court in which it was pending was engaged in hearing another proceeding. Upon stipulation the presiding judge referred it to a member of the bar, who qualified as a judge pro tempore, evidence was taken before him, and on December 22, 1926, he signed the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment, to which appellant reserved exceptions upon the ground that the judge pro tempore had been divested of authority to perform the functions of a judge of the superior court.

Obligation of bond to appear and answer misdemeanor charge "in whatever court it may be prosecuted" held not discharged by defendant's appearance by attorney at call of case in municipal court after its remand thereto by superior court for new trial; defendant never having surrendered himself to court's custody.

CONREY, P. J. On writ of review. In this proceeding the court is called upon to determine the validity of a summary judgment entered, upon forfeiture of a bail bond.

In the municipal court, one Armando was convicted of a misdemeanor, and was sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment. Thereupon the defendant appealed from the judgment, and was admitted to bail, and an undertaking of bail executed by petitioner was duly approved and filed. The bond, after the usual preliminary recitals, provides that the surety undertakes that the defendant "will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and shall, at all times render himself amenable to the orders and processes of any court in which the same may be prosecuted; and that he will surrender himself in execution of the judgment, upon its being affirmed or modified, or upon the appeal being dismissed, or that, in case the judgment be reversed and that the cause be remanded for a new trial, that he will appear in the court to which the cause may be remanded, and submit himself to the orders and processes thereof."

Upon the bail so given the defendant was released from custody. Thereafter the superior court reversed the judgment and remanded the cause for a new trial. The order of the superior court having been duly filed in the municipal court on December 13, 1928, the cause was called for resetting. At that time one W. Davis appeared for the defendant, and the case was continued to the next day. On December 14th, Davis again appearing for defendant, the case was set down to be tried on January 9, 1929. "Defendant ordered to appear. Thirty day period waived." When the case was called for trial on January 9th, the defendant failed to appear. Thereupon the court declared the bail forfeited. Thereafter such proceedings were had that summary judgment was entered against said surety, Pacific Indemnity Company, in the superior court. In the present proceeding by writ of review, the surety contends that the superior court, in entering such judgment, was without jurisdiction, and that the judgment should be declared null and void.

[1] Petitioner's first point is that the bond is void because the conditions of liability, as stated therein, go beyond the requirements of the statutory form of an appeal bond as contained in section 1273 of the Penal Code. That section does not set out a prescribed form, but it provides the essentials of the agreement to be contained in the bond. "1273. Nature of Bail. * * * If the offense is bailable, the defendant may be admitted to bail * * * after conviction, and upon an appeal: * * * If judgment of imprisonment has been given, that he will surrender himself in execution of the judgment, upon its being affirmed or modified, or upon the appeal being dismissed, or that in case the judgment be reversed, and that the cause be remanded for a new trial, that he will appear in the court to which said cause may be remanded, and submit himself to the orders and process thereof."

The bond now in question contained the agreement required by section 1273. But by words preceding that agreement it specified, in other terms, an undertaking that the defendant "will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and shall, at all times render himself amenable to the orders and processes of any court in which the same may be prosecuted." The contention of petitioner is that the inclusion of these words made the bond a void instrument because they constitute a departure from the bond required by the statute, as set forth in Penal Code, § 1273.

The headnote, as well as the text, of section 1273, indicates that there was no intention to prescribe the particular form of the undertaking. In the case of an appeal, if the appeal is dismissed, or if the judgment is affirmed or modified by the appellate court, there will be no further "prosecution," since the enforcement of the judgment relates only to the results of a completed prosecution. If the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, there is no uncertainty about the identity of the court to which the cause must be remanded. From these considerations, it is a reasonable conclusion that the obligation of the surety as expressed in the words "will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted," etc., was in no respect made to differ from the obligation incurred by the words of agreement that the defendant "will appear in the court to which the cause may be remanded." We conclude that the bond was a valid instrument.

[2] Next, petitioner contends that the valid terms of the bond were complied with when Armando appeared by attorney on the call of the case as hereinabove stated, on December 13th and December 14th, and that "the bond thereupon became functus officio, and no forfeiture thereof or judgment thereon could be validly rendered." This point rests upon the further claim that in a misdemeanor case the defendant need not personally appear, and that his appearance by attorney, when the case is on trial, or preliminary thereto, is a sufficient compliance with the obligation of the bond. The Constitution declares that in criminal prosecutions the defendant has the right "to appear and defend, in person and with counsel." Const. of Cal., art. 1, § 13. It is provided by section 1043 of the Penal Code that in a prosecution for misdemeanor the trial may be had in the absence of the defendant; whereas in section 1434, Penal Code, it is provided that "the defendant must be personally present before the trial can proceed." This apparent contradiction is not actual. People v. Aymar (Cal. App.) 276 P. 595, is a recent decision by Division 2 of this district. (Rehearing denied by Supreme Court.) It was there held, for reasons fully explained, that section 1043 relates to superior courts only, and that section 1434 applies to municipal courts and to the inferior courts. By consequence it was further held that, upon failure of the defendant to appear at the trial of a misdemeanor prosecution against him in the municipal court, the court was authorized to declare a forfeiture of the bond given for his appearance.

[3] We are further of the opinion that the obligation of the bond was not discharged by reason of defendant's appearance by attorney at the call of the case on December 13th, or by his appearance by attorney on December 14th. The defendant has never surrendered himself to the custody of the court. If he had left the state, as he may have done, there was no remaining power of the law to hold him, except through the surety on his bond. This control, we think, the law retains, until the defendant has personally submitted himself by an appearance in court.

[4] The next point requiring attention is that the judgment is void because the recitals of fact contained therein refer to entries in the docket of the municipal court, and not to the minute entries, as required by section 1305 of the Penal Code. Under the facts shown by the record, the superior court was authorized to render a summary judgment upon the filing, by the district attorney, of the bond and a "certified copy of forfeiture" as contained in the municipal court's order of forfeiture. The bond was filed, and with it a certified copy of the "minutes" showing the order of forfeiture. There was filed also a certified copy of the "Docket," containing some of the facts recited in the judgment and not stated in the so-called "minutes." We are of the opinion, however, that the docket itself constitutes minutes of the municipal court. Section 1428 of the Penal Code reads as follows: "Minutes, How Kept. * * * A docket must be kept by the justice of the peace or police justice, or by the clerk of the courts held by them, if there is one, in which must be entered each action and the proceedings of the court therein." The heading, "Minutes, How Kept," as the Code was enacted, is a part of the section. Bettencourt v. Sheehy, 157 Cal. 698, 701, 109 P. 89; People v. Richards, 86 Cal. App. 86, 90, 260 P. 582. By the provisions of section 1461a, Penal Code, the procedure to be followed by the municipal courts in misdemeanor cases is required to be the same as provided in certain sections relating to justices' courts. Section 1428 is one of those sections. We have not discovered any provisions of statute which would change or be in conflict with those above noted, nor have we found any good reason why the docket should not be regarded as containing "minutes" of the court. The recitals in the judgment in the case now under review include the jurisdictional facts contained in the "docket" and in the "minutes," and show that they were brought to the attention of the court. This was sufficient to establish the court's jurisdiction to enter the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

- 1. Pleading $\S$ 345(1) — Complaint alleging wrongful levy on property resulting in final inability to procure loan to pay incumbrance stated cause of action on motion for judgment on pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448).

Complaint alleging ownership of property incumbered by mortgage and wrongful levy thereon at time owner was negotiating for a loan to satisfy incumbrance, so that he was unable to secure the money to satisfy the obligation, resulting in loss by reason of sale of premises under trust deed, held to state a cause of action on motion for judgment on the pleadings under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, which, though perhaps defectively stated, could in many particulars be cured by amendment.

- 2. Pleading $\S$ 345(1)—Instructions as to levy and sheriff's return were not "defense founded upon a written instrument" to action for damages for wrongful levy, justifying judgment on pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, and $\S$ 542, subd. 2).

Written instruments consisting of instructions given to sheriff in order to levy on property and return of sheriff, reciting levy in conformity to Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 542, subd. 2, did not constitute a "defense founded upon a written instrument," within meaning of section 448, to action for damages by reason of wrongful levy so as to furnish basis for judgment on pleading.

- 3. Pleading $\S$ 345(1)—Written instrument constitutes no basis for judgment on pleading unless binding on opposite party or signed or executed by him (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, to effect that genuineness and due execution of written instrument constituting defense to action are deemed admitted, relates only to genuineness and due execution of instrument, and, unless they are instruments which are binding upon opposite party or writings or instruments which he has signed or executed, they furnish no ground for judgment on pleadings.

Where writing does not constitute a defense, fact that its execution is not denied furnishes no basis for judgment on pleadings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Loren L. Miller against W. C. Price and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

L. C. Woods, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants entered upon the pleadings.

The complaint in the action alleges that on and prior to the 11th day of February, 1926, the plaintiff was the owner of certain real property situate in the county of Los Angeles, described as follows, to wit: The south 25 feet of lot 5, and the north 25 feet of lot 6, in block 42 of Owensmouth, as per Map Book 19, p. 36, of maps in the office of the county recorder of said county; and lots 7, 8, 16, 18, and 20 of block 62 of Owensmouth, as per Map Book 19, p. 36 of maps, in the office of the county recorder of said county. That said property was, at the date mentioned and at the date of the beginning of this action, of the value of $11,500, incumbered to the amount of $2,638, secured by a deed of trust payable on the 17th day of March, 1926; that on the 11th day of February, 1926, the said defendants caused to be issued out of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles an execution in an action entitled "W. C. Price vs. John P. Hight et al.," and that acting under and by virtue of said writ of execution, and under instructions of the defendant as to what property to levy upon, the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles did, on the 13th day of February, 1926, wrongfully and without right so to do, levy upon the property heretofore described; that at the time of the levy upon said property the plaintiff was negotiating for a loan of sufficient amount to satisfy the aforesaid incumbrance, and was at such time offering as security for the money to be loaned a deed of trust on the foregoing described property, and that the plaintiff had no other means by which to obtain a sufficient amount to satisfy said incumbrance; that by reason of said wrongful levy, as aforesaid, the plaintiff was unable to secure the money with which to satisfy the said obligation, and that on the 30th day of July, 1926, the trustees in said trust deed named sold said real property to satisfy the obligation referred to; that by reason of the foregoing wrongful acts on the part of the defendants, the plaintiff suffered damage in the sum of $8,862; wherefore, the plaintiff prayed judgment against the defendants. To this complaint the defendants interposed a general demurrer and also a special demurrer that the complaint was uncertain in some particulars not necessary to be mentioned. The demurrer being overruled, the defendants answered, and in their answer denied the ownership of the plaintiff in and to the real property mentioned; denied that the real property was of the value of more than $2,638; denied that the levy of the execution was wrongful; and then, for a further answer, alleged that on the 16th day of June, 1925, in a certain action pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county, the defendant in this action, W. C.

Price, obtained a judgment against John P. Hight, Jr., Harriet M. Hight, his wife, and L. B. Miller, in the sum of $4,587.73, together with the further sum of $7 costs and disbursements, and that said judgment was regularly entered in the judgment records of the county of Los Angeles; that thereafter an execution was issued upon said judgment and the plaintiff gave to the sheriff the following instructions: "You are hereby instructed to levy and attach, by virtue of the accompanying writ, in the above entitled suit, the following described property, and place a keeper in charge at plaintiff's expense, viz.: All the right, title and interest of the defendant, L. B. Miller, in and to the following described property." (The property described being the same as that hereinbefore set forth.) Signed: "William Ellis Lady, Attorney for plaintiff." In pursuance of these instructions the sheriff proceeded to make levy upon all the right, title, and interest of L. B. Miller in and to the real property hereinbefore described, making return thereof as provided by law, and delivering a copy of the writ, together with a notice and description of the property levied upon, to the county recorder of Los Angeles county. Upon these pleadings the defendants moved the court for entry of judgment in favor of the defendants, and upon the hearing of said motion, judgment was so entered. The plaintiff's motion for a new trial being denied, this appeal was taken.

[1, 2] In 21 California Jurisprudence, 240, we find the rules laid down as to how motions or judgments upon the pleadings should be determined. It is there said: "Where a motion is made for judgment on the pleadings the court should dispose of it, even though it has sustained, without leave to amend, a demurrer filed contemporaneously therewith. Such motion should be determined upon the same principles as a general demurrer. Accordingly, on a motion by plaintiff, objections to the answer which are required to be taken by special demurrer or motion to strike out will be disregarded, while on a motion by defendant the court may not consider any matter outside the complaint or any defense thereto in the answer, or any grounds of special demurrer to the complaint; in neither case are questions as to the admissibility or sufficiency of evidence involved." In view of these rules it must be held that the complaint under consideration states a cause of action which, though perhaps defectively stated, may, in any particulars which we might point out, be cured by amendment. The judgment on the pleadings in this action was entered upon, and is sought to be sustained by the respondent by reason of the provisions of section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: "When the defense to an action is founded upon a written instrument, and a copy thereof is contained in the answer, or is annexed thereto, the genuineness and due execution of such instrument are deemed admitted, unless the plaintiff file with the clerk, within ten (10) days after receiving a copy of the answer, an affidavit denying the same, and serve a copy thereof on the defendant. (If the defendant relies upon a written instrument, in whole or in part, that fact shall be pleaded.)" That such contention is untenable appears from the reading of the written instruments set out in the defendants' answer. The only written instruments set out are the instructions which were written, given by the defendant to the sheriff, as to what property to levy upon, and the return of the sheriff reciting that he has levied upon all the right, title, and interest of L. B. Miller in and to the real property mentioned, the levy being made, and the return thereof conforming to subdivision 2 of section 542 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There can be no disputing the fact that a levy of execution upon real property, or of any one's right, title, and interest therein, casts a cloud upon the title, and that to remove such cloud, the owner of the property would be put to the time and expense of more or less extended litigation. There can be no question, likewise, that the levying of an execution upon property of an owner thereof, under the guise that a third person has an interest therein, is wrongful. If such third person has no interest, then and in that case the levy is wrongful. The only question in such cases is the amount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled by reason of the wrongful levy, and whether only compensatory or exemplary damages should be awarded.

[3, 4] Again, the basis of the motion in this case and the action of the trial court in ordering judgment for the defendants are based upon a misapplication of the provisions of section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section relates only to the genuineness and due execution of the instruments, and unless they are instruments which are binding upon the opposite party, or writings or instruments which he has signed or executed, then, and in that case, they furnish no grounds for a judgment upon the pleadings as against said opposite party. Such papers are simply in the case for what they are legally worth, with their genuineness and execution admitted. In other words, there is no contradiction that the plaintiff, through his attorney, in the case of Miller v. Hight, gave the instructions set out in the exhibit, nor that the sheriff levied the execution upon the property alleged to be owned by the plaintiff. The two writings set out in the transcript are simply Exhibits A and B, attached to the defendants' answer, and are not writings binding upon the plaintiff in any particular; he was no party to either of them, and if the instructions were wrongfully given, as alleged by the plaintiff, and the levy wrongfully made, as alleged by the plaintiff, then and in that case Exhibits A and B attached to the defendants' answer constitute no defense whatever. What we have said clearly appears from the case of Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411, where a similar question was presented. It is there said: "The statute provides, that when a complaint or answer is founded on an instrument in writing, which is alleged to have been signed by the party, the signature shall be considered as admitted, unless denied by such party on oath. The party to be charged was the representative of the estate of the person whose signature appears on the bond. He had not signed the instrument, and could not deny upon oath its execution by the deceased. It is clear that the statute does not extend to any other parties than those who are alleged to have signed the instrument. Such parties are supposed to know the genuineness of their own signatures, but it would be unreasonable to suppose that the representatives of a deceased party possess the same knowledge." In the case of Marx v. Raley & Co., 6 Cal. App. 479, 92 P. 519, 520, an identical situation was presented with the circumstances in the case at bar. In that case a letter was set out in the pleadings, and it was claimed that section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure was controlling. The court there said: "The principal contention of appellant is that the letter set out in the answer was a written instrument upon which its defense was based, and its execution was not denied under oath. Hence, under section 448, Code Civ. Proc., no proof was admissible controverting its due execution. * * * In our opinion, however, the letter embodied in the answer is not an instrument upon which the defense is founded in contemplation of the Code. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411, declares: 'It is clear that the statute does not extend to any other parties than those who are alleged to have signed the instrument.'" In that case it was said, just as we may say here, "that the plaintiff was bound to know the genuineness of the signature of the defendant." However, if the plaintiff did know the genuineness of the signature of the attorney and the instructions given to the sheriff as to the real property upon which he was to make the levy, it would not constitute any defense whatever as to the charge of the levy being wrongful. Again, the exhibits set forth in defendants' answer as "Exhibits A and B" do not constitute any defense founded upon written instruments as contemplated by the section of the Code of Civil Procedure to which we have referred. They are merely statements of what the defendants have done, through their attorney, and what the sheriff has done in pursuance of instructions given to him by the defendants' attorney. If, upon the trial of this cause, it should be proven that the levy of the execution was wrongful, the instructions given by the defendants, and the action of the sheriff following the instructions so given, would constitute no defense. Their being set out as exhibits attached to the defendants' answer in no wise affected the issues to be tried. At best, they constitute matters of evidence which it would be proper for the plaintiff to introduce to show that the sheriff acted under the instructions of the defendants' attorney, and then supplement the same, if such testimony exists, by testimony showing that the instructions were wrongfully given. In other words, the plaintiff would have to prove just exactly what the defendants allege to constitute a defense, to wit, that the instructions were given, and that the sheriff acted upon the instructions. The cases are numerous to the effect that where a writing does not constitute a defense, the fact that its execution is not denied furnishes no basis for a judgment on the pleadings. Thus, in Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. v. Pocatello, etc., Co., 41 Idaho, 403, 240 P. 186, it was held: "Where a contract is pleaded in an answer and a copy is attached thereto, failure to deny the genuineness and due execution thereof by affidavit does not admit the same, under C. S. § 6705, when the answer and contract, construed together, do not constitute a defense founded upon a written instrument."

In Krug v. Warden, 57 Cal. App. 563, 207 P. 696, 697, where an intervener in an action to quiet title pleaded a tax deed, and no affidavit denying its due execution and genuineness was filed, sought to invoke the provisions of section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, the court said: "This contention results from a mistaken idea regarding the effect of the provisions of section 448, Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides only that, where a defense is founded upon a written instrument which is copied into the answer, 'the genuineness and due execution of such instrument are deemed admitted,' unless there is an answer under oath denying the same. That an instrument is genuine and has been duly executed can mean only that the party who appears to have made it has attached his signature thereto knowingly, and caused it to be delivered. * * * Plaintiff could not deny that the deeds had been signed by the purported parties or delivered. It was admissible, however, for him to prove that the conveyance to Warden was void," etc.

In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371, where a tax deed was attached to the answer and its execution and genuineness were undenied, it was held that the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, as the defenses which the plaintiff might have to the tax deed were unaffected.

Again, in Interstate Realty Co. v. Clark, 77 Cal. App. 558, 247 P. 244, where it was sought to invoke the provisions of section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, based upon a tax deed, the court said: "If under our rules of procedure the respondent could attack the validity of the tax deed upon any of the grounds noted, and if any one of these grounds is sufficient to invalidate the deed, then the judgment must be sustained. Section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, when a written instrument is pleaded in the answer, the plaintiff is deemed to admit its genuineness and due execution, unless he controverts it by affidavit. This, however, does not estop the plaintiff from disputing the invalidity of the deed upon any other ground than 'its genuineness and due execution.' Applied to the present case, all that could be claimed for the two exhibits, annexed to the defendants' answer, is that the defendants' attorney signed the written instruments and the sheriff executed the levy in pursuance thereof. Other cases might be cited, but these sufficiently establish the law that section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, has no application to papers or written instruments executed only at the behest of one of the litigants and to which the other litigant is not a party, of which she has no knowledge, and especially where they describe actions alleged to be wrongful, as in this case.

We do not need to review the cases cited by the respondent to sustain the judgment in this action, but will content ourselves with saying that an examination of them shows that the opposite litigant was a party to the instruments, or the cases exhibited instances where a party set up a writing showing that he had either no cause of action or no defense. We may mention two of the cases relied upon by the respondent which illustrate what we have just said. In the case of Mangold, etc., v. Utterback, 54 Okl. 655, 160 P. 713, L. R. A. 1917B, 364, the instrument was a negotiable promissory note bearing the indorsement of the party sought to be charged. In Ankeny v. Clark, 148 U. S. 345, 13 S. Ct. 617, 37 L. Ed. 474, the written instrument relied upon by the defendant in his answer showed that he had no title to the premises claimed. The other cases cited by respondent are in line with these two, which requires only the statement of what was involved to show their inapplicability to the issues here presented.

The judgment is reversed.

FITZGERALD v. WALSER, Sheriff.
(Civ. 7112.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 23, 1929.

1. Bankruptcy §284—Demand for return of goods is unnecessary, where such goods were consumed before commencement of action.

Bankruptcy trustee's action for conversion against sheriff need not be preceded by demand for return of goods, where such goods were consumed before commencement of action, and demand would have been futile.

2. Bankruptcy §303(3)—In trustee's action for conversion by sheriff of bankrupt's goods, contention of sheriff that he was in possession of equivalent quantity of goods of like character, which he could have turned over, had demand been made, was not sustained by evidence that he sold goods on hand at time of attachment.

In bankruptcy trustee's action against sheriff for goods of bankrupt converted and sold, sheriff's contention that he was in possession of equivalent quantity of goods of like character, which he could have turned over to trustee, had demand been made, was not supported by evidence that goods on hand at time of his attachment had been sold by him; trustee's demand not being subject to satisfaction by return of goods subsequently acquired.

3. Bankruptcy §303(3)—In bankruptcy trustee's action for conversion, defense that sheriff took possession of bankrupt's goods with consent of bankrupt and attaching creditor held unsupported.

In bankruptcy trustee's action for conversion of goods of bankrupt by sheriff under writ of attachment, defendant's contention that he took possession of property with consent of bankrupt and attaching creditor held not supported by evidence.

4. Bankruptcy §290—Trustee's action for conversion was not defeated by trustee's sale of bankrupt's assets, where converted property was not on premises at time of sale.

Action of trustee in bankruptcy against sheriff for conversion of bankrupt's goods under writ of attachment is not defeated by trustee's sale of fixtures remaining in bankrupt's premises, where none of the property disposed of by sheriff was situated or located on premises at time of such sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Boyce R. Fitzgerald, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Sam Brice, bankrupt, against J. C. Walser, Sheriff of Kern County. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rowen Irwin and Rollin Laird, both of Bakersfield, and E. A. Klein, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Siemon & Garber, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $469.17. The plaintiff is the trustee of the bankrupt estate of one Sam Brice. The defendant is the sheriff of the county of Kern.

On September 8, 1926, in an action wherein the Bakersfield Market, Inc., was the plaintiff, and one Sam Brice was the defendant, said sheriff attached the French Café in Bakersfield, belonging to said Brice. At the instance of the plaintiff in said action, one Andrews was placed in charge of said café as a keeper, and continued to operate the restaurant business under the direction of the attaching creditor. The sheriff failed to take any inventory of the property attached as aforesaid, and, so far as the record discloses, took no further interest in the property. It appears from the evidence of a deputy sheriff that the Bakersfield Market, Inc., entered into an agreement with the sheriff to indemnify him for any loss which he might incur by reason of his allowing the receiver to continue the business of the French Café.

On September 18, 1926, said Brice was adjudicated a voluntary bankrupt by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Northern Division. On October 2, 1926, the plaintiff in the case at bar was appointed and duly qualified as the trustee of the estate of said bankrupt, and on the same day took possession of the French Café and made an inventory of the property. He was informed by Andrews, the keeper, that all of the stock on hand at the time of the attachment by the sheriff had been purchased from the sheriff by the Bakersfield Market, Inc., and had all been consumed in conducting the business, and the stock then on hand was new. The trustee made a full inventory of the fixtures, dishes, and other articles belonging to the estate of the bankrupt, and located in said café, and these were afterwards sold by the trustee to the Bakersfield Market, Inc., for the sum of $3,000. The trustee also received from the sheriff $425.10, the amount he claimed was received by him from the sale of the stock on hand at the time of the attachment, which sum included the cash on hand at the date of the attachment. The trustee alleged in his complaint in this action that when the sheriff attached the property there was cash on hand amounting to the sum of $684, and there was also attached a stock of groceries, vegetables, and supplies of a similar character, of a reasonable value of $2,000.

The court found, and there is ample evidence to support the finding, that when the attachment was levied there was cash on hand amounting to the sum of $168.20, a stock of groceries, etc., of a nonperishable character, of the value of $527.07, and a stock of perishable supplies, of the value of $200, their total value amounting to the sum of $895.27.

It is further found that the sheriff paid to the plaintiff the sum of $425.10, leaving a balance due plaintiff of $470.17. The judgment entered amounts to $1 less than was found to be due the plaintiff.

[1] Appellant contends that, the action being one for the conversion of personal property, it was the duty of respondent to have demanded of the sheriff a return of the goods before commencing this action. The goods having been consumed before the commencement of the action, a demand for them would have been futile, and therefore unnecessary. Mier v. Southern California Ice Company, 56 Cal. App. 512, 206 P. 83.

[2] It is also claimed that the sheriff was in possession of an equivalent quantity of goods of like character, which he could have turned over to the trustee, had a demand been made. We are of the opinion that this claim is answered by the fact that, under the evidence of his own deputy, the goods on hand at the time of the attachment had been sold by him. The proceeds thereof were included in the $425.10 paid to the trustee.

[3] It is also claimed that the business of the French Café was conducted with the consent of Brice, the owner, and the Bakersfield Market, Inc., the attaching creditor. We do not find in the record any consent or acquiescence by Brice, the owner. On the contrary, the sheriff took possession of the property by virtue of the writ of attachment and it does not appear that Brice was ever consulted or had anything further to do with the café after the attachment.

[4] It is further claimed that in the sale of the fixtures made by the trustee there was included all of the property which is the subject-matter of this litigation. This contention is based upon the recitals contained in the order of confirmation, where it is said that the sale included all the right, title, and interest in and to all the personal property situated and located in said restaurant, whether described in the inventory or not. At the time the sale was made, and at the time it was confirmed and the bill of sale executed, all of the property sued for in this action had been disposed of by the sheriff, and none of it "was situated or located in said restaurant."

This disposes of all the objections presented by the appellant. The judgment is affirmed.

ROBERTS v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al. (Civ. 3839.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1929.

1. Electricity ⇨16(5)—Neglect of city to inspect power lines for two and a half months would create presumption of constructive notice of defect (St. 1923, p. 672, § 2).

Neglect of city to inspect its electric lines for period of two and a half months after wires had been knocked down by falling of tree would create presumption of constructive notice of defect and constitute negligence, within St. 1923, p. 672, § 2, if city was under duty to make inspection of lines.

2. Negligence ⇨121(1)—Conspicuous defect existing for considerable time will create presumption of constructive notice.

When a duty exists to inspect and maintain property in a safe condition, presence of a conspicuous defect or dangerous condition of the appliances, which has existed for considerable length of time, will create a presumption of constructive notice thereof.

3. Electricity ⇨15(2)—One unlawfully cutting limbs of fallen tree, under which live wire was concealed, was trespasser as to city, where tree grew upon city property (Pen. Code, § 602).

One who attempted to sever limbs of tree for purpose of appropriating wood to his own use, when tree which grew on park property which belonged to city had fallen partly obstructing roadway, was trespasser as to the city, cutting and removing the wood constituting misdemeanor under Pen. Code, § 602; hence recovery could not be had against city for such person's death resulting from shock from live wire hidden under branches, notwithstanding failure of city owning the power line to make inspection.

4. Negligence ⇨32(1), 33(1)—Owner of property owes trespasser or licensee no duty except to abstain from willful injury.

It is well settled that, as against trespasser or mere licensee, the owner of property owes no duty to keep the premises in safe condition, but merely to abstain from willful or wanton injury.

5. Electricity ⇨15(2)—City having no actual knowledge through its agents of condition of city's wires pulled down by falling of tree on city property held not liable for death of trespasser electrocuted while severing branches.

Where none of agents of city maintaining electric power line had actual knowledge of fact that tree growing on city park property had fallen across property line, pulling down wires, and there was no evidence of willfulness or wantonness of city, city was not liable for death of one attempting to cut off branches and remove the wood for his own use, who was electrocuted by live high-power wires concealed in the branches, though city had failed to make inspection and tree had lain on roadway for about two and a half months; deceased being trespasser as to city.

6. Electricity ⇨15(2)—Power company controlling electric line jointly with city was not relieved by fact that one electrocuted by hidden wires in fallen tree was trespasser as to city.

That deceased who was electrocuted by live high-power wires concealed in branches of tree was trespasser as to city owning property on which tree grew, because of deceased's attempt to cut and remove wood, held not to relieve from liability power company which with city maintained joint control over electric line; and power company was under duty to deceased to exercise due caution for his safety.

7. Electricity ⇨17—Power company reserving control of city's electric line, for transmitting energy for independent customer, was bound to exercise due caution to inspect line.

Where power company reserved use and control over electric lines constructed for city, for purpose of transmitting electrical energy for sale to independent customer of power company, company was liable for death through electrocution resulting from its failure to exercise due caution to inspect its line or maintain reasonably safe system and appliances for transmitting electricity.

8. Electricity ⇨19(10)—Question of due care in inspecting electrical equipment is ordinarily for jury.

Ordinarily, the question of whether due care has been exercised to inspect electrical equipment and discover defects in appliances is a matter to be determined by the jury, in action for injuries resulting from negligence in that respect.

9. Electricity ⇨17—Power company reserving control over city's electric line for furnishing energy to golf club using park could not avoid liability for death resulting from failure to inspect line, where golf club was self-sustaining.

Where power company constructing electric line to become property of city maintained ownership of transformers, switches, and meters in connection with line, and reserved control thereof for purpose of transmitting electrical energy to golf club, and golf club, though maintained on park property, had private membership paying membership fees, and maintained course and clubhouse, and contracted and paid for electricity which it consumed, it was no defense to the power company in suit for death of one electrocuted, due to failure to inspect line, that company was exempt from liability because reserving no independent control over line.

10. Electricity ⇨19(12)—Contributory negligence of one cutting wood from fallen tree under which were concealed live wires held for jury.

In action against power company for death of one electrocuted by wires concealed by foliage of fallen tree lying on road, contributory negligence of deceased in going among branches of tree to cut wood held question for jury, since deceased might have assumed that wires lying under the tree were broken or carried no load of electricity.

11. Electricity ☞19(13)—Trial ☞243—Instruction, in action for death from electrocution, that power company using city's line for transmitting energy to others was also under duty to make repairs, held not conflicting or misleading.

In action against city and power company for death of one electrocuted by hidden live wires under tree fallen in roadway, instruction that city became owner of power line with duty of maintaining and repairing it, and that power company, if using line to conduct electricity to customers other than city, was also under duty to maintain and repair it, held not conflicting or misleading, where power company reserved part control of line.

12. Electricity ☞14(1)—Electric light company using road must exercise due care to avoid injury to travelers.

Electric light company permitted to use road generally used for public travel must exercise due care in construction, inspection, and maintenance of wires and poles so that travelers on road will not be injured, and, where danger reasonably apprehended is great, care and vigilance must be commensurate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Leroy Roberts, as administrator of the estate of Reuben C. Roberts, deceased, against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and the City of Chico. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

J. C. Wood, of San Francisco, J. D. Peters, of Chico, Thomas J. Straub, of San Francisco, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for appellants.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. Separate appeals were taken by the respective defendants from a judgment for damages which was entered against them jointly upon the rendering of a verdict for $12,500 for the death of plaintiff's intestate, who was killed by coming in contact with a high-power electric wire which was pulled down by the falling of a tree.

The defendant city of Chico owned an extensive tract of land which was used as a public park and was called Bidwell Park. In this park a golf course and two swimming pools were maintained. March 11, 1925, the city executed a written agreement with the defendant Pacific Gas & Electric Company, by the terms of which the electric company agreed to and did construct in and upon said park an electric line of wires and poles covering a distance of five or six miles, to be used for lighting purposes. The contract provided in part: " * * * The Company agrees forthwith * * * to prosecute to completion the work of constructing for the applicant (City of Chico) * * * a pole and wire electric line of the character and along the route as specified and delineated upon the sketch attached hereto and made a part hereof. Said line, upon the completion of the construction thereof, shall become the sole property of the applicant, but all transformers, switches, and meters furnished by the company for use in connection with said line shall at all times be and remain the sole property of the company. * * * " This system of electric poles and wires extended on and across the city park property for a distance of about five miles to a point on the Big Chico creek called Five Mile dam, except that for a distance of about 2,300 feet it crossed the property line and extended along the border of an adjoining public roadway. This electric line extended beyond Five Mile dam a distance of about half a mile to the clubhouse which was maintained by a golf club in Bidwell Park. The electric company installed and maintained transformers at the clubhouse, and supplied it with light. This golf club was financed by means of membership and patronage fees. The defendant electric company supplied all the electric light and power used in Bidwell Park. The wires carried 2,300 volts of electricity. The electric company collected for this service regularly from the golf club as a separate customer. The city of Chico had no device or means of controlling the electricity which passed over the wires throughout the park. This transmitting of electric energy over the system was regulated and controlled solely by the defendant Pacific Gas & Electric Company.

The record contains no evidence showing that either the city of Chico or the Pacific Gas & Electric Company patrolled, inspected, or repaired the electric line after its completion and prior to the occurrence of the accident. Ten feet from the edge of the park property a large sycamore tree eighteen inches in diameter was growing. Ten or fifteen feet distant from this tree the electric wires extended along the border of the public roadway. About the middle of September, 1927, this tree fell, dragging the wires down to about three feet from the ground, where the tree lay across the wires for a period of two and a half months, partially obstructing the roadway. The wires were concealed in the branches and foliage of the tree, but were not broken, and continued to carry the load of 2,300 volts of electricity. On December 3d the plaintiff's intestate, in company with one Dunnigan, took an automobile and trailer and drove along this road in search of firewood. A short distance from the place where this fallen tree lay protruding into the roadway one of the tires of the machine received a puncture. While Dunnigan was repairing the puncture, Mr. Roberts took an ax, and was proceeding to cut the branches of this tree for firewood, when he came in contact with the live electric wires and received injuries from which he subsequently died. Regarding the purpose of cutting the limbs of this tree, Mr. Dunnigan testified: "Q. Do you know why he went to the tree? A. Well to trim the tree. Q. What do you mean by 'trimming the tree'? A. Well, to trim up the top of it for wood. Q. For wood? A. Yes. Q. That was his purpose in going there? A. Yes."

Upon proceedings duly had, the plaintiff was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate of said deceased, and subsequently recovered a judgment against both the city of Chico and the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, as joint tort-feasors. From this judgment separate appeals were perfected.

[1] The appellant city of Chico contends that it is relieved of responsibility for negligence in this case by the provisions of the Statutes of California of 1923, page 675, section 2, for the reason that it was not shown that the city or its agents had knowledge of the dangerous condition of the electric wires. It does, however, appear without contradiction that a large sycamore tree which was growing upon the park premises fell some time in September, 1927, across the property line, pulling down the wires in its fall, and that they lay in this conspicuous condition, partially obstructing the roadway, for about two and a half months.

It is true that the line of electric poles and wires extended along the margin of the public roadway for a distance of 2,300 feet at the place where the accident occurred. It may, nevertheless, have been the duty of the city to reasonably inspect the line along this roadway. It seems unnecessary to determine this problem, however, owing to the disposition of the case which we are constrained to make with relation to the liability of the city of Chico. If this obligation to inspect the line at this place still rested upon the city, its neglect to do so for a period of two and a half months created the presumption of constructive notice of defects which had existed that entire length of time, and constituted negligence on its part.

[2] When a duty exists to inspect and maintain property in a safe condition, the presence of a conspicuous defect or dangerous condition of the appliances which has existed for a considerable length of time will create a presumption of constructive notice thereof. Dawson v. Tulare Union High School Dist. (Cal. App.) 276 P. 424; Wurzbarger v. Nellis, 165 Cal. 48, 130 P. 1052; Rafferty v. Marysville, 280 P. 118; 43 C. J. 1043 to 1057.

[3] The evidence is undisputed that, at the time the deceased received the electric shock from which he died, he was unlawfully engaged in cutting for his own use the limbs of the fallen tree in the branches of which the live high-power wire was concealed. This tree grew upon the Bidwell Park property and belonged to the city of Chico. Although, in falling, the top branches of the tree extended beyond the property line and rested upon the public roadway, it nevertheless constituted a trespass against the city on the part of the deceased to unlawfully attempt to sever the limbs of the tree for the purpose of appropriating the wood to his own use. It therefore follows that the deceased was injured while engaged in the performance of an act of trespass against the defendant city of Chico. Cutting and removing the timber constituted a misdemeanor. Section 602, Pen. Code. An actual unauthorized entry upon the land of the defendant city for the purpose of unlawfully taking and removing the wood was not necessary to constitute trespass on the part of the deceased. An unlawful and tortious infringement of the rights of the city by cutting and taking its timber was sufficient to create the relationship of a trespasser. In Leisure v. Monongahela Valley Traction Co., 85 W. Va. 346, 101 S. E. 737, it is said "every person guilty of any tortious infringement upon the rights of another" is a trespasser.

[4, 5] The very act which constituted the trespass was the cause of his injuries. The city was therefore not liable for damages, unless it had actual knowledge of the fallen wires, and willfully or wantonly inflicted or caused the injuries. The rule exempting the owner of property from liability for injuries sustained by a trespasser is concisely stated in Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 550, 169 P. 80, 81, as follows:

"It is well settled that as against a trespasser or mere licensee the owner of property owes no duty to keep the premises in safe condition. The only duty is to abstain from willful or wanton injury." 19 Cal. Jur. 616, § 52; 45 C. J. 742, § 132; 9 R. C. L. 1207, § 17; 20 R. C. L. 57, § 53; Lindholm v. N. W. Pac. Ry. Co., 79 Cal. App. 34, 248 P. 1033.

A person who without license or permission climbs a pole upon which electric wires are attached becomes a trespasser, and may not recover from the owner thereof for injuries sustained by coming in contact with live wires. Augusta Ry. Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ga. 653, 16 S. E. 203; 2 Joyce on Elec. Law, 987, § 610. Willfulness and wantonness may not exist without actual knowledge of the danger. Since the evidence in the present case shows affirmatively that none of the agents of the city of Chico had any knowledge of the fallen and dangerous condition of the wires, and there was a total absence of evidence tending to indicate willfulness or wantonness on the part of the city, it is relieved of all responsibility for the injuries which resulted in the death of plaintiff's intestate. It therefore becomes necessary to reverse the judgment in so far as it affects the defendant city of Chico.

[6] The fact that the deceased was a trespasser with respect to the defendant city of Chico by virtue of his wrongful violation of its property rights, in no sense exempts the defendant Pacific Gas & Electric Company from liability for negligence. The electric company had no property rights in the fallen tree which were interfered with. In spite of the exemption from liability on the part of the owner of the tree, the electric company still owed the deceased the duty of exercising due caution for his safety.

In 2 Joyce on Elec. Law, 986, it is said: "The fact that one is a trespasser as between himself and a landowner is held not to relieve an electric company from the duty to exercise care towards the former and the jury may infer negligence from the omission of a guard wire."

In the case of Guinn v. Delaware & A. Tel. Co., 72 N. J. Law, 276, 62 A. 412, 413, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, 111 Am. St. Rep. 668, a guy wire had been stretched by the defendant electric company over an open field across which people were accustomed to travel at will to and from a ball ground in an adjoining field. The guy wire broke and fell across a live electric wire. Thus charged with electricity, the guy wire dangled down into the grass where a boy who was crossing the field without license came in contact with it and was killed. The defendant electric company contended it owed the deceased no duty to preserve his safety, for the reason that he was a trespasser. This theory was denied by the court, which held that, although the landowner might set up this defense in a proper action, the defendant electric company could not avail itself of this exemption from liability. The court said:

"If [the deceased were] a trespasser, his wrong would be to the landowner alone, not a public wrong, nor a wrong to the defendant. The case differs from one where a trespasser or licensee seeks to recover of the landowner. A landowner may, in fact, reasonably anticipate an invasion of his property, but in law he is entitled to assume that he will not be interfered with. His right to protect his possession and to use his property is paramount. * * * The exemption of the landowner from liability as to trespassers and licensees is necessary to secure him the beneficial use of his land; but no reason exists for extending this exemption to the case where the rights of the defendant have not been interfered with."

The appellant Pacific Gas & Electric Company disclaims liability for the death of Roberts, and seeks a reversal of the judgment on the grounds that (1) The electric line, including the poles and wires, was the property of the city of Chico; (2) the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence; and (3) the court erred in charging the jury.

[7] It is true that the contract provided that the electric line was to become "the sole property of the applicant (City of Chico)." But the electric company reserved the use and control of the line for the purpose of transmitting over the wires electric energy for sale to a regular customer, namely, the golf club. From a consideration of the undisputed record, we must assume that the Pacific Gas & Electric Company reserved a joint control of the line with the city of Chico. At least these wires were used by the company without objection on the part of the city to transmit electricity to an independent customer of the company. It follows that the company therefore became responsible for failure to exercise due caution to inspect the line or to maintain a reasonably safe system and appliances for transmitting the electricity.

The duty of an electric company in conducting its business of handling and selling this dangerous commodity is stated in 9 Ruling Case Law, 1217, as follows:

"It is well settled that it is the imperative duty of such a company not only to install proper appliances, but also to make reasonable and proper inspection of such appliances, and to use due diligence to discover and repair defects therein, and a failure to do so constitutes negligence. Notice of a defect, in order to charge the company with liability therefor, need not be direct and express; it is enough that the defect has existed for such a length of time that it should have been known."

[8] Ordinarily, the question of whether due care has been exercised to inspect electric equipment and discover defects in the appliances is a matter to be determined by the jury. 9 R. C. L. 1218, § 25; 1 Joyce on Elec. Law, 726, § 438b.

The verdict of the jury in this case implies a finding that both defendants were guilty of negligence for failure to inspect the line. It is not contended that either of the defendants ever did inspect it. The defendant electric company reserved control over its transformers and apparatus at the clubhouse, together with the privilege of transmitting the electricity over the park line for sale to its customer at the golf club. It was therefore bound to maintain reasonable inspection of the lines of which it was making use for its own benefit and profit. A casual inspection of the wires extending from the main line through the park and along the road to the clubhouse would have disclosed the fallen tree and wires. This failure on the part of the company, although a like duty was imposed upon the city of Chico, rendered it liable for negligence.

It is ordinarily true that a company which neither owns nor controls the wires or appliances over which it merely transmits electric energy is not obliged to inspect the line, and will not be liable for injuries sustained by reason of defective appliances. 9 R. C. L. 1204, § 15; Hoffman v. Leavenworth L., H. & P. Co., 91 Kan. 450, 138 P. 632, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 574; Memphis Cons. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Speers, 113 Tenn. 83, 81 S. W. 595; Bristol Gas & Elec. Co. v. Deckard (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 66. Except for the reservation of control and use of the appliances and line to supply the golf club with light and power, the electric company would have been relieved of responsibility. But when control, or even joint control, of an electric line is reserved and exercised as in the present case, the electric company will be liable for a lack of due care.

[9] It is asserted by the electric company that, because the golf club to which it sold and furnished electricity was maintained on the park property under the supervision of the city park commission, and that the city paid for a part of the equipment thereof, therefore the sale of electricity to this golf organization was in truth a furnishing of energy to the city of Chico, and that the company, therefore, reserved no independent control over the line, and is exempt from liability. It is true that Bidwell Park was a gift to the city, consisting of 2,280 acres of land, which was conveyed by the donor with the express reservation that "the second party (city of Chico) shall use the same for the purpose of a public park for the benefit of the citizens and residents of said city of Chico," and that a violation of the conditions under which the park was conveyed would have the effect of causing the title to revert to the grantors. It is also true that the city never did convey title to the golf course. The city also paid for the construction of the electric line from the Five Mile dam to the clubhouse; for the foundation of the clubhouse and for sinking a well on the premises. But the record also shows that this golf club was an organization independent of the city or park administration. It consisted of a large number of members residing both in and outside of the city of Chico, who pay $18 each per year, as membership fees, together with the customary green fees. This club constructed and maintained the course and clubhouse at its own expense, and also contracted and paid for the electricity which it consumed. Mr. Williamson, the chairman of the Bidwell Park playground commission, testified in this regard:

"We have had nothing to do with the running of that Club House or with the running of the Golf Course. * * *

"Q. Isn't it a fact * * * that every dollar of expenditure for the support, maintenance, and upkeep of that Golf Course, the employees and all other incidental expenses of every nature and character are paid by what is known as the Chico Golf Club? A. Yes, as far as I have any knowledge; they are certainly not paid by the Bidwell Park and Playground Commission. * * *

"Q. Your Commission has nothing to do with the payment of, for instance, the caretaker of that Golf course? A. No.

"Q. Or the electrical energy that is supplied there? A. No, sir.

"Q. Or for paying for the road in the Golf Club or repairing it or fixing it or anything else on the place? A. No sir."

It also appears that, to avoid the forfeiture clause of the park deed of conveyance, it was arranged that no person should be denied the privilege of playing golf on the course, although they refused to pay the designated fees therefor. However, it does not appear that any one ever refused to pay these fees.

Under such circumstances, it seems clear that the golf club was an organization distinct from the city of Chico, and constituted an independent customer to whom the electric company regularly sold its electric energy. There is nothing in the record of this transaction which tends to show that the electric company relinquished its control of the line or appliances by means of which the golf club was furnished electricity, or that the city of Chico held or exercised the exclusive control thereof. The very fact that the terms of the contract provided that "all transformers, switches, (and) the meters furnished by the company for use in connection with said line shall at all times be and remain the sole property of the Company," indicates an express reservation of these appliances, so that the company might control the use and sale of electricity to the golf club or to any other independent customers which it might procure. We are of the opinion that the record does not disclose a relinquishment of the entire control of the electric line on the part of the company, and that the company is therefore not relieved from responsibility for negligent failure to inspect the line.

[10] It is claimed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in going among the branches of the tree when the wires were plainly visible as they sagged down beneath the fallen tree from the cross-arms on the poles from either side. The wires, however, were concealed by the foliage of the tree and by the vines. The deceased did not live in that immediate vicinity, and it does not appear he was familiar with the use of this electric line. As a reasonable man, he may have assumed that wires which were pulled down to the ground and lay beneath the fallen tree were either broken or carried no load of electricity. Under the circumstances of this case, the existence of contributory negligence was a question for the jury to determine. Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 103, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114; Howell v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 87 Cal. App. 44, 54, 261 P. 1107; Foley v. N. Cal. Power Co., 14 Cal. App. 401, 112 P. 467.

[11] The defendant electric company complains of two instructions, the first of which was given on the court's initiative and the second at the request of the plaintiff. The last paragraph of the following instruction is challenged as erroneous:

"I instruct you that under the application or contracts admitted in evidence, the City of Chico became the owner of the power line in question, with the exception of the transformers, meters and ground wires which were the property of defendant Power Company and in the absence of a provision otherwise, the duty of maintaining and repairing such power line devolved upon said City.

"And I further instruct you that if you find that the defendant Power Company was using said power line for the purpose of conducting electricity thereover, and through and by means of its own transformers, meters and other necessary devices and thereby furnishing and selling electric power and light to individuals or organizations other than or in addition to the City of Chico and its governmental agencies then, and in such event, the duty also devolved upon said Power Company to see to it that the said power line was maintained and kept in such repair as not to endanger those who may rightfully be in close proximity to the said power line."

It is asserted that the two paragraphs of the foregoing instruction are conflicting, in that the first paragraph assumes that the city of Chico was the sole owner of the electric line, and thereby became responsible for the maintenance and repair thereof, while the last paragraph charged the jury that, if they found that the electric company used the line to furnish its customers other than the city of Chico with electricity, it also owed the deceased a duty to keep the line free from defects and dangerous conditions. This was a correct statement of the law under the circumstances of this case. Assuming, as we have heretofore declared, that there is substantial evidence from which the jury could determine that the electric company did reserve the use and control of the line for the purpose of selling and transmitting its energy to the golf club, and that this organization constituted a customer separate and distinct from the city of Chico, then the electric company would be jointly liable with the city for failure to keep the line in a reasonably safe condition. This obligation on the part of the electric company exists because of its reservation of the use and joint control of the line, and in spite of the actual ownership of the wires and poles by the city. Under such circumstances this instruction was not conflicting or misleading.

[12] Finally, it is contended that the following instruction was erroneous and prejudicial:

"The jury is instructed that electric light companies which are permitted to use for their own purposes roads that are generally used and traveled by the public are required to exercise due care in the construction and inspection and maintenance of their wires and poles to the end that travelers along such roads will not be injured by their appliances.

Where the danger to be reasonably apprehended is great, the care and vigilance must be commensurate."

This instruction correctly stated the law applicable to the facts of this case. The defendant company constructed the line contrary to contract, so that it extended for at least 2,300 feet along the public roadway, in which space the accident occurred. On the assumption that the company retained a joint right to use and control the line for the purpose of supplying its independent customer at a point beyond this place where the wires extended along the road and where the accident occurred, it would be required to use due diligence to protect those who traveled this road against a defective and dangerous condition of the wires. There was therefore no error in this instruction. The jury was fully and fairly charged. There was no miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is reversed in so far as it affects the defendant city of Chico. Otherwise the judgment is affirmed.

SWARTZ et ux. v. ACME EXPRESS &
DRAYAGE CO. et al. (Civ. 7067.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨930(4)—On appeal from judgment on verdict for plaintiff, court must assume that jury found her not contributorily negligent and determine whether her admitted conduct constituted such negligence as matter of law.

On appeal from judgment on verdict for plaintiff, Court of Appeal must assume that jury found plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence and determine whether her admitted conduct constituted contributory negligence as matter of law, as jury's verdict on fact issue must stand, unless record presents reversible error.

2. Negligence ⇨136(26)—Contributory negligence is ordinarily fact question for jury, unless there is standard of prudence, to which all persons similarly situated must conform.

Ordinarily, the question of contributory negligence is one of fact for jury, and not one of law, unless there is a standard of prudence, to which all persons similarly situated must conform.

3. Negligence ⇨136(26)—To take issue of contributory negligence from jury, defendant must show that plaintiff's acts failed to meet some standard of prudence.

Contributory negligence being an affirmative defense, burden of proving which is on defendant, defendant must show that plaintiff's acts failed to meet some standard of prudence to take such issue from jury as a question of law alone.

4. Negligence Ⓒ136(26)—Issue of contributory negligence must be submitted to jury, if facts do not justify nonsuit on such ground alone.

Issue of contributory negligence must be submitted to jury under proper instructions, if facts are not such as would justify trial court in granting a nonsuit because of such negligence alone.

5. Appeal and error Ⓒ842(4)—Particular method employed to avoid injury cannot be held contributory negligence as matter of law, in absence of established rule of conduct.

In absence of rule of conduct, established by statute, judicial decision, custom, or practice, Court of Appeal cannot say that any particular method employed to avoid injury is contributory negligence as matter of law because it is not the method the court would have used under same circumstances.

6. Appeal and error Ⓒ999(3)—Jury's finding for plaintiff on issue of contributory negligence is conclusive on appeal.

Jury's finding for plaintiff on issue of contributory negligence is as conclusive on appeal as its finding on issue of defendant's negligence.

7. Appeal and error Ⓒ201(2)—Claim that court's remarks brought to jurors' attention fact that defendant was insured cannot be considered on appeal, in absence of objection or request for instruction.

Defendant's claim that court's remark, during examination of prospective jurors, as to whether there was any insurance company in reference to which defendant's attorney wished to interrogate jurors, and opportunity to be given plaintiff's attorney to do so, brought to jury's attention fact that defendant was insured, cannot be considered on appeal, where defendant did not object or request instruction.

8. Trial Ⓒ296(4,5)—Instruction as to elements of damage jury could consider if they found plaintiff entitled to verdict held not erroneous as ignoring defense of contributory negligence, fully covered in other instructions.

Instruction advising jurors as to what elements they could consider in assessing damages, "if you find from the evidence that the plaintiffs are entitled to a verdict," held not erroneous as permitting verdict for plaintiffs irrespective of defense of contributory negligence, where latter issue was fully covered in numerous other instructions.

9. Trial Ⓒ260(8)—Refusal of instructions on contributory negligence, covered by other instructions, held not reversible error.

Refusal of instructions on contributory negligence held not error, where subject-matter thereof was covered by other instructions given at plaintiff's request though language thereof was not as favorable to defendant as those refused and those respecting defendant's negligence were given at plaintiff's request and framed in language most favorable to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by H. R. Swartz and wife against the Acme Express & Drayage Company, an association, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Rothchild & Golden and J. A. Pritchard, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued for damages for personal injuries. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiffs for $5,000. From the judgment on the verdict the defendants appeal on type-written transcripts.

Mrs. Swartz was driving her automobile in a westerly direction along the public highway between Walnut Creek and Lafayette, in Contra Costa county, when, in approaching a curve on the highway, she collided with a trailer attached to a truck operated by defendants and which was at the time being driven in an easterly direction along the same highway. The left wheel of the trailer struck the left front wheel of plaintiffs' car in such a manner that the steering gear was jammed. The Swartz car then proceeded slowly across the left-hand side of the highway a distance of about 35 feet to the edge of a creek, paused momentarily, and then plunged down to the stream bed, where it turned on its side and where Mrs. Swartz received the injuries complained of. The negligence charged to the defendants is the operation of the truck at an excessive rate of speed, about 26 miles an hour; the careless attachment of the trailer which permitted it to swing to the left on the curve; and the driving of the truck too near the center of the highway. The defendants denied all these charges of negligence and set up the contributory negligence of Mrs. Swartz, consisting in her driving with one hand and with eyes averted from the highway while giving attention to her small child seated in the rear of the automobile, and in her failure to apply either her foot or emergency brake after the collision or to take any other means to prevent her car from going into the creek bed.

[1, 2] On the issue of defendants' negligence the evidence was conflicting, but sufficient appears to support the jury's verdict adverse to the defendants. The first charge of contributory negligence was denied in a measure by Mrs. Swartz and the jury apparently accepted her testimony. The second charge comes directly from her own testimony and is without any contradiction in the record. No special issue was made of it and no special instruction was requested by the defendants. The point comes to us on this appeal to determine whether the admitted facts constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law because, if the issue is one of fact only, the verdict of the jury must stand unless the record presents reversible error. Thus, if the verdict had been for the defendants the evidence of Mrs. Swartz's negligence in this respect would have been sufficient to sustain it, but with the verdict for plaintiffs we must assume that the jury found that Mrs. Swartz was not guilty of a failure to use ordinary care under the circumstances. Therefore the question is: Does the admitted conduct constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law? Ordinarily, in cases of this character, the language of Williams v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 177 Cal. 235, 237, 238, 170 P. 423, 424, applies. It is there said: "The question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury to solve under proper instructions, and not one of law save in those cases in which, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, there is a standard of prudence to which all persons similarly situated must conform. In such cases failure to reach that standard is contributory negligence as matter of law."

[3, 4] The defense of contributory negligence being an affirmative defense, the burden of proving which is on the defendant, it is necessary for the defendant to show that the acts of the plaintiff failed to meet some "standard of prudence" in order to take the issue from the jury as a question of law alone. One basis of determination of this question is: Are the facts such that they would justify the trial court in granting a nonsuit because of the plaintiffs' contributory negligence alone? If the facts were not of such a nature, then the issue must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions as one of the issues of fact for its determination. Here, though the evidence is clear that Mrs. Swartz did not apply her brakes after the impact and before her car plunged into the creek bed, there is no evidence to show that she did not use other means to prevent the plunge which at the time seemed most prudent to her. She testified that she endeavored to turn the steering wheel to get off the left-hand side of the highway. Her danger from stopping on the left side of the highway on a "blind curve" may have seemed greater than a plunge into the creek bed.

[5, 6] In any event, in the absence of some rule of conduct which is established by statute, by judicial decision, or by established custom or practice, we cannot say that any particular method employed to avoid injury is negligence as a matter of law because it is not the method that we would have used under the same circumstances. When therefore the issue is such that it must be left with the jury and the jury has returned a verdict for the plaintiff, we must assume that the jury found adversely to the defendant on the issue of contributory negligence. Such finding is just as conclusive on appeal as the jury's finding on the issue of defendant's negligence.

[7] Error is assigned to the following incident which occurred during the examination for the selection of the jury.

"The Court: * * * I might ask, Mr. Snook, if there is any insurance company mentioned in this case, any insurance carrier, that you want to interrogate the jurors in reference to?"

"Mr. Snook: No, I don't, your Honor.

"Mr. Golden: I do, your Honor.

"The Court: Well, I will give you the opportunity hereafter."

The appellants claim that the remarks of the court brought to the attention of the jury that the defendants were insured, but they did not object or request an instruction and this forecloses consideration of the point on appeal. Anderson v. United Stages, Inc., 192 Cal. 250, 253, 219 P. 748; Hughes v. Hartman (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 560.

[8] Appellants complain of instruction No. 25, which was given at the request of respondents. This instruction advised the jurors as to what elements they could consider in assessing damages "if you find from the evidence that the plaintiffs are entitled to a verdict." The appellants argue that the instruction was erroneous because it permitted a verdict for the respondents irrespective of the defense of contributory negligence. But the latter issue was full covered in numerous other instructions given.

[9] Further complaint is made of the refusal to give three listed instructions on the subject of contributory negligence. We find no error here, as the subject-matter of the requested instructions was covered by other instructions given at the request of the respondents. It is true that the instructions given were not worded in language as favorable to the appellants as were those refused, while those touching the issue of appellants' negligence were given at respondents' request and were framed in language most favorable to respondents, and, though we may not approve this practice, it has been held not to be reversible error. Bergen v. Tulare County Power Co., 173 Cal. 709, 721, 161 P. 269.

Judgment affirmed.

PRETZER v. CALIFORNIA TRANSIT CO.
(Civ. 278.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨800—That brief is on file at time of notice of motion to dismiss appeal is alone sufficient to defeat motion (Court of Appeals Rule 5).

Under Court of Appeals Rule 5, fact that brief is on file at time notice of motion to dismiss appeal is given is alone sufficient to defeat motion, though appeal will be dismissed otherwise unless a reasonable excuse for delay is shown.

2. Appeal and error ⇨771—Sufficiency of showing as to reasonable excuse for delay in filing brief is for court.

Sufficiency of showing relative to reasonable excuse for delay in filing brief as respects motion to dismiss appeal is a question to be determined by court.

3. Appeal and error ⇨771—Pressure of business is not reasonable excuse for delay in filing brief.

Pressure of business does not constitute a reasonable excuse for failure to file brief on appeal within time.

4. Appeal and error ⇨771—Negotiations for settlement presented no reasonable excuse for delay in filing brief, when negotiations were definitely terminated before expiration of time for filing.

Fact that portion of time for filing brief on appeal was occupied with negotiations for a settlement did not present reasonable excuse for failure to file brief within time, where it appeared that all negotiations for settlement were definitely terminated in time to permit filing of brief.

5. Appeal and error ⇨771—Printer's refusal to work overtime to complete briefs presented no reasonable excuse for delay in filing brief.

Refusal of printer to work overtime in order to complete brief presents no reasonable excuse for failure to file brief on time, since it is incumbent on litigants to assume responsibility of getting briefs printed.

6. Appeal and error ⇨765—Time of arrival of brief at appellate district having jurisdiction before transfer may be taken as time for consideration in measuring default.

Where appellant's attorney had no knowledge of transfer of case to different appellate district, the time of arrival of brief at original appellate district may be taken as time to be considered in measuring default, if any, by reason of failure to file brief within time.

7. Appeal and error ⇨771—Lack of notice to appellant's attorney of transfer of case to different appellate district presented sufficient excuse for delay in filing brief.

Where appellant's attorney had no notice of transfer of case to different appellate district and would have been able to file brief before notice of motion to dismiss if he had known of transfer, there was sufficient excuse for failure to file brief in court to which case was transferred within time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Jack Pretzer against the California Transit Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Young & Young and De Forrest Home, all of Los Angeles, and Wakefield & Hansen, of Fresno, for appellant.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This motion to dismiss the appeal herein was made on the ground that appellant had failed to file his opening brief within the time permitted by the rules of the court and the requirements of law. It appears from the record herein, and affidavits filed in connection with this motion, that the transcript upon this appeal was filed in the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, on July 29, 1929. The time for appellant to file its opening brief expired August 28, 1929. Respondent's counsel signed a stipulation extending this time to September 28, 1929, then another stipulation extending the time to October 28, 1929. On October 30, 1929, although the appellant was then in default, a third stipulation was signed, extending the time to November 18, 1929. Respondent signed this stipulation because appellant claimed to have been misled by previous negotiations for a settlement. On October 28, 1929, respondent's attorney had notified appellant's attorneys by letter that all negotiations for a settlement were terminated. On or about November 14, 1929, respondent's counsel refused a further extension. Appellant thereupon applied to the court for a 30-day extension, and on November 18, 1929, said court made an order extending the time to November 25, 1929. On November 19, 1929, an order was entered by said District Court of Appeal transferring this cause to the District Court of Appeal for the Fourth appellate district. Appellant's attorneys, not knowing the case had been transferred, mailed their brief at Los Angeles on November 25, 1929, addressed to the clerk of the First appellate district. It arrived at San Francisco on November 27, 1929, and was forwarded to the office of the clerk of the Fourth appellate district at Fresno, where it was received on November 29, 1929. The brief was not filed, pending the outcome of this motion. Notice of motion to dismiss the appeal was filed in Fresno on November 26, 1929. An order shortening the time for hearing was obtained on November 27, 1929, and the notice was received by the attorneys for appellant on November 27, 1929.

[1, 2] Under rule V of the Rules governing this court, if the brief is on file at the time the notice of the motion to dismiss the appeal is given, that fact alone is sufficient to defeat the motion. If the brief is not filed until after notice of the motion has been given, unless a reasonable excuse for the delay is shown, the appeal will be dismissed. The sufficiency of such showing is a question to be determined by the court. Carter v. Paige, 77 Cal. 64, 19 P. 2. Respondent cites Shain v. People's Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 120, 32 P. 878, and McCabe v. Healy, 139 Cal. 30, 72 P. 359, to support his contention that a motion to dismiss the appeal must be determined by the facts existing at the time the notice of motion was filed and served. These cases state the rule that applies where no sufficient excuse for the delay is shown. Where no sufficient excuse is shown, an appeal may be dismissed even though the brief is filed two days after service of the notice of the motion. Coats v. Coats, 146 Cal. 443, 80 P. 694. It has been held that, where a transcript was filed the same day a notice to dismiss an appeal was served, but at a later hour, the motion to dismiss must prevail, unless a sufficient excuse for delay is shown by the appellant. Chapman v. Bank of California, 88 Cal. 419, 26 P. 608. In passing upon the sufficiency of the showing made in the last-named case, the court said:

"This shows that the appeal was taken and prosecuted in good faith. The delay in filing the transcript was trifling, and the hearing and decision of the cause on its merits will not thereby be delayed, at least not appreciably. The circumstances which occasioned the delay and oversight of counsel were such as to appeal strongly to the discretionary power of the court, and would, without doubt, have procured an order extending the time for filing the transcript if they had been brought to our attention before the motion to dismiss was made. If so, there is no reason why we may not after the motion relieve the appellant from the consequences of his delay when the facts show that before service of the motion to dismiss he was proceeding with all expedition to rectify his mistake."

[3-5] Under the circumstances existing in this case, it is entirely a question of whether or not a reasonable excuse for failure to comply with the rule is shown. Several grounds of excuse for his delay are here set up by appellant. One of these is the usual one of "pressure of business." This is without merit and need be given little consideration. Berendson v. Babdaty, 62 Cal. App. 185, 216 P. 385; Waugaman v. Richardson, 72 Cal. App. 10, 236 P. 207. Were the rule otherwise, it would probably be difficult to dismiss any appeal on the ground of delay, since it might be difficult to find attorneys who possess both leisure and the disposition to admit it. Another reason given for the delay is that a portion of the elapsed time was occupied with negotiations for a settlement. Since appellant's attorneys were definitely notified on October 28, 1929, that all negotiations for a settlement were terminated, we think the showing on this point would entitle it to no relief. Nor can it be accepted as an excuse that the printer refused to work overtime in order to complete the brief on time. It is incumbent upon litigants to assume the responsibility of getting their briefs printed on time.

[6] We are, however, of the opinion that some reasonable excuse for the apparent priority of the filing of the notice of this motion over the filing of appellant's opening brief appears here, in view of the fact that the attorneys for appellant had no knowledge of the transfer of this case from the First appellate district to the Fourth appellate district. The brief was mailed from Los Angeles to San Francisco on November 25, 1929, the day it should have been filed, and received by the clerk of the First appellate district on November 27, 1929. The notice of motion to dismiss this appeal was filed at Fresno on November 26, 1929, an order shortening the time for hearing was made on November 27, 1929, and the papers received by appellant's attorneys on November 27, 1929. In the absence of knowledge of the transfer, appellant had the right to send his brief to the First appellate district, and, for the purpose of this motion, the time of its arrival there may be taken as the time to be considered in measuring its default, if any. It arrived there the same day the notice of this motion was served on appellant's attorneys, though whether at an earlier or a later hour does not appear. There is some question whether, so far as this motion is concerned, the brief may not be considered as having been filed when the notice of this motion was served.

In any event, the delay in filing the brief was trifling, the hearing and decision of the case will not be appreciably delayed, and the attorney for appellant was making an apparently sincere effort to comply with the rule (Chapman v. Bank of California, supra) at the last minute, although his previous conduct indicates, not only a degree of negligence, but that he relied and counted upon the liberality of both court and counsel in the matter of time.

A further consideration is that it would have been easily possible for appellant to have filed this brief on November 25, 1929, in the office of the clerk of this court in San Bernardino, only 60 miles from Los Angeles, had the fact of the transfer of the case been known. Had it even been mailed to San Bernardino it would, in the regular course of events, have been on file when respondent's notice of this motion was filed in Fresno. And respondent's notice of this motion would have been filed in San Francisco at least a day later had he not known of the transfer.

[7] We feel that sufficient excuse and reason appears to make it advisable to deny the motion. But we justify our liberality in this matter, not by any merit in the excuses offered by appellant's attorneys, but by the peculiar circumstances existing here. There is too much tendency on the part of attorneys to excuse their failure to file briefs and transcripts on grounds similar to those here presented. The rule involved on this motion is for the benefit of both the court and litigants, and, in order that its value be not lost, it must ordinarily be enforced. Berendson v. Babdaty, supra.

For the reasons given, the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Separate actions by E. C. Redman and another against F. L. Weisenheimer, against W. A. Usher, and against Louise Brunning Cable. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs' appeal. Reversed.

Frank H. Snyder, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Randall J. Hood, of Los Angeles, for respondents Usher and Weisenheimer.

C. F. Cable and L. R. Godward, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Cable.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. Three separate actions were commenced in the court below by the plaintiffs against the defendants for the purpose of quieting their title against certain tax deeds running to the defendants. Inasmuch as they all involved the same alleged defects they were tried together; judgment in each case went for the defendant; and the appeals from the several judgments are presented to us by stipulation in one transcript. The property is all situated in the Redman elementary school district, the Antelope Valley union high school district, and in the county of Los Angeles. The sales were for delinquent taxes for the year 1916.

Three contentions are advanced by the appellants as reasons for the reversal of the judgments, and they are as follows:

First. That the delinquent tax list published by the tax collector in 1917, pursuant to the provisions of section 3764 of the Political Code, was insufficient.

Second. That the board of supervisors had no authority to levy a tax for the support of the county free library for the reason that the Redman elementary school district maintained a circulating library.

Third. That the tax levied to provide a sinking fund to meet the interest on the bonded indebtedness of the Antelope Valley union high school district was not uniform and was for that reason void, or at least that evidence to establish the invalidity was improperly rejected.

For the sake of clarity we have set down the above assertions in their order and shall follow them seriatim in our consideration of the cause.

[1] Turning to the claim that the delinquent tax list was insufficient because it specified that the amounts set opposite the descriptions of the parcels of property represented the "amount due for taxes and costs," without saying whether the sums also covered penalties, we find that the transcript does not disclose the situation which is argued. Counsel evidence an appreciation of their failure to have included in the bill of exceptions the delinquent tax list, by asking this court to order the document to be sent here for inspection. Of course such is not a proper proceeding. It devolves upon an appellant to present a record which affirmatively shows the existence of the error relied upon. Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476. Where there is a failure in this particular, the appellate tribunal must indulge the presumption that there is no error and that the judgment and findings are properly supported. Beck v. Schmidt, 13 Cal. App. 448, 110 P. 455.

[2] We are thus brought to the second question, namely, did the maintenance by the Redman elementary school district of a free circulating library exempt the property of that district from a tax for the support of the county free library? The question must be answered in the negative. The district school library which was maintained was a part of the system intended to be provided primarily for the schools by the provisions of sections 1712 to 1717, both inclusive, of the Political Code. The library for the support of which the tax was levied is known as the county free library established by the board of supervisors under the authority of "An act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of county free libraries in the state of California, * * *" Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, p. 982. The last-named act empowers and directs the supervisors to annually levy a tax not exceeding one mill on each dollar of assessed valuation upon all property outside of incorporated cities and towns maintaining free libraries and outside of library districts maintaining district libraries. The library districts referred to are those organized pursuant to the provisions of "An act to allow unincorporated towns and villages to establish, equip and maintain public libraries, * * * etc." Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, p. 992. Libraries so established are entirely separate and distinct from the school libraries to which reference has already been made.

[3] The last assault upon the judgments is on the ground that the assessment was not uniform because while a tax was levied upon the property situated in the school districts of Rogers, Del Sur, Redman, and Lancaster for the purpose of raising funds with which to pay interest upon outstanding bonds of the Antelope Valley union high school, no tax was levied for similar purposes upon the property in the Esperanza district although all of the districts are included within the high school district. It appears from the county auditor's certificate introduced without objection, that for the purpose mentioned the property in the first named districts was taxed at the rate of 14 cents on every $100 of assessed valuation, but that property in the Esperanza district was taxed nothing. The plaintiffs offered two resolutions of the board of supervisors, the first authorizing the issuance of bonds by the high school district and the second reciting their sale, but an objection to their reception was sustained. The question to be first determined is whether the omission of the property of Esperanza district voids the assessment. We find a very succinct definition of uniformity in taxation in the case of People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351, wherein it is said: "A tax is equal and uniform, which reaches and bears with the like burden upon all the property within the given district, county, etc. It bears the like burden, when the valuation of each parcel is ascertained in the same mode—the mode prescribed by law—and when it is subject to the same rate of taxation as other property within the district, county, etc." The converse of this statement may for our purposes be stated to be, that where the property is not subject to the same rate as other property within the district the tax is not equal and uniform. Other expressions illustrating the necessity of uniform taxation may be quoted. From People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 339, 13 Am. Rep. 143, we cull the following: "It is impossible to conceive of any law which is more imperatively required by the principles of good government and the just rules of political economy to be equal and uniform than a revenue law. That the burdens of taxation should rest equally upon all property within the State ought to be axiomatic, not only in theory but in practice." We select an excerpt from Cottle v. Spitzer, 65 Cal. 456, 4 P. 435, 52 Am. Rep. 305, in these words: "It is the settled policy of all governments, republican in form, that the burdens of taxation shall fall equally upon their citizens. Where resort is made to direct ad valorem taxes, for the purpose of revenue, in order to carry out both the letter and spirit of that policy, it becomes necessary that property should be assessed for taxation, not only according to a just and uniform standard of value, but that all property should be thus assessed and taxed; for if the property of A. is taxed and that of B. is left to go untaxed, it is manifest that the burdens of taxation have been very unequally imposed upon the people. Consonant with this principle, which is a corner-stone in the structure of a free government, the constitution of the state provides that 'all property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law.'" We might continue such quotations to greater lengths for the books abound with declarations of the fundamental principle. But sufficient has been said to accentuate the vice of the assessment under consideration. If the property in the Esperanza district could legally be left free from the tax levied upon the remaining districts included within the high school district, then it must "follow as the night the day" that the total tax might with like effect be levied upon the property of only one of the elementary districts, while all of the others were permitted to escape their proper share of the burden.

[4] What effect then does the invalid assessment have upon the tax deed? The answer is found in Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, 260, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, as follows: "No proposition is better settled than this, that proceedings to sell property for taxes are to be strictly followed, and that, if there is any material irregularity in the assessment or in the subsequent proceedings, the sale, and the certificate and deed based thereon, are absolutely void."

Judgments reversed and new trials ordered.

KOZLOWSKI v. ADAMS. (Civ. 3970; L. A. 10230.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 15, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1930.

1. Pleading ⇨126—Vendor's denial that purchaser paid portion of price of lot, map of which was not recorded, in form of negative pregnant, constitutes admission of allegation.

Vendor's denial that purchaser, suing for money paid on purchase price of lot, map of which had not been recorded, had paid certain sum on purchase price, in form of negative pregnant, constitutes in effect an admission of that allegation.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨340—Seller is not precluded from defending claim for price payment because of unlawful act in selling lot on unrecorded map.

In action to recover money paid on price of lot, map of which was not recorded, defendant is not precluded from making defense to claim for damages because of his unlawful act in selling lot on an unrecorded map, which constitutes a misdemeanor.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(2)—Allegation that vendor represented map of lot purchased was recorded held immaterial, in action for money paid on purchase price, in absence of allegation plaintiff was without such knowledge.

Allegation, in complaint in action to recover money paid on purchase price of lot, that defendant represented to plaintiff's assignor that map in question was recorded, held immaterial, because it was not alleged that either plaintiff or assignor was without knowledge that map was unrecorded, or that either of them was misled or deceived by representations of vendor.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨39—Contract for sale of lot, map of which was unrecorded, was void, allowing purchaser's recovery of amount paid.

Contract for sale of lot, map of which was not recorded, held void, and purchaser is entitled to recover from vendor amount paid on purchase price.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(5)—Damages cannot be allowed for vendor's breach of contract in action for amount paid on lot, where contract was void because map was unrecorded.

Where contract for sale of lot was void, because map of lot was unrecorded, there was no basis for allowance of damages for breach of contract, in action by purchaser to recover amount paid on purchase price and for damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Kora Kozlowski against B. G. Adams. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Arthur C. Fisher, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George S. Hupp, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the defendant entered into an agreement with Rose Henderson, by the terms of which he agreed to sell and convey to her lot S4, tract 4754, in the city of Los Angeles, for $3,500; that he showed her a map of the tract, and told her that it "was the official and recorded map of said tract"; that thereafter Rose Henderson transferred all her rights under the contract to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff has paid the defendant on the purchase price of the lot the sum of $2,500; that the defendant thereafter informed the plaintiff that he would not convey the lot to her, because the said map had not been recorded; that thereafter the plaintiff tendered the balance due under the contract and demanded a conveyance of the lot to her, but that the defendant refused; that at the time of entering into the contract the defendant knew that the map was not recorded; that the plaintiff has been damaged, in addition to the amount paid upon the purchase price of the lot, in the sum of $6,500. The prayer is for the recovery of the amount so paid, and damages in the sum of $6,500.

The answer, signed by the defendant "in propria persona," denies, among other things, "that the plaintiff has paid on account of said purchase price the sum of $2,500," admits that the alleged map was not recorded at the time the contract was executed, and alleges that the defendant has "offered to refund to plaintiff all moneys paid on said contract plus 7 per cent. interest."

Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $4,933.70 and costs of suit, and the defendant has appealed.

The defendant was not personally present at the trial, but an attorney was in court attempting to act for the defendant. The court refused to permit the attorney to represent the defendant, apparently on the ground that he had not been regularly substituted as attorney in place of the defendant, acting as his own attorney, and stated: "You have no case at all here. The man sold a lot, and the map of the tract was never recorded, and under the law he has committed a misdemeanor. I will not permit you to put in any testimony whatever." The court refused to permit defendant's attorney to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, or to introduce any evidence in defense. In reply to such attorney's statement that the defendant had a right to present his defense, the court said: "I will not permit the introduction of any evidence under your answer. * * * I cannot permit you to defend, because your answer shows that you have violated the law and are guilty of a misdemeanor. * * * If he was on a criminal trial, of course, he could defend; * * * but your own answer puts you out of court."

[1, 2] The denial of the allegation that the plaintiff had paid the sum of $2,500 on the purchase price of the lot is in the form of a negative pregnant, and constitutes, in effect, an admission of that allegation; but, if the language of the court is to be understood as stating that the defendant was precluded by his unlawful act from making any defense to the plaintiff's claim for damages, then the court was clearly in error. Whether counsel who attempted to represent the defendant at the trial had a right so to appear for him need not be determined on this appeal, because the judgment must be reversed on other grounds, and the question probably will not arise on a retrial of the case.

[3] The allegation in the complaint that the defendant represented to the plaintiff's assignor that the map in question was recorded is immaterial, because it is not alleged that either the plaintiff or her assignor was without knowledge of the fact that the map was unrecorded, or that either of them was misled or deceived by the representation.

[4, 5] It is clear that the alleged contract is void, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the purchase price paid thereon. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14; White v. Jacobs (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 1087; Hartzell v. Doolittle (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 527; Letteau v. Dumas (Cal. App.) 278 P. 459; Shortell v. Evans-Ferguson Corporation (Cal. App.) 277 P. 519; Krause v. Marine Trust & Savings Bank (Cal. App.) 270 P. 246. Plaintiff's claim for damages is for a breach of the alleged contract. An "action for a breach of contract is one based upon the contract." Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, 3, 183 P. 150, 151. A so-called void contract is not a contract at all, and it is only the statement of a truism to say that there cannot be a breach of a contract which has no existence. There is no basis, therefore, for an allowance of damages for breach of contract. Evidence was introduced to show that the plaintiff had paid certain sums for taxes and interest. Evidence was also introduced as to the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff.

Counsel for defendant asked the court to make findings, but the court refused, saying: "Findings are denied, by reason of the fact there was no appearance on the part of the defendant." There being no findings, it is impossible to ascertain upon what the judgment for $4,933.70 is based, but clearly the amount is greatly in excess of any sum properly allowable under the evidence. There being no basis upon which to modify the judgment, it is necessary to send the case back for a retrial.

The judgment is reversed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank
Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing of this cause in the Supreme Court is denied.

We are in accord with the District Court of Appeal in its ruling that the trial court was in error in denying the defendant the right to make his defense to the plaintiff's cause of action. We withhold our approval, however, of that portion of the opinion holding that the contract for the purchase of the lot described in the complaint in said action was void and the plaintiff could not, therefore, recover damages for its breach. As to this phase of the case, we express no opinion.

In re HUNT'S ESTATE.★

LUCAS et al. v. VALZ et al.

(Civ. 6645.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1930.

Judgment ~~691~~—After compromise of pending actions involving controversies under testamentary trust and consent decree, parties thereto held estopped to contest validity of trust.

Where compromise of several pending actions between parties thereto was effected by which controversies regarding validity of charitable trust created under will were settled as well as all claims of parties against testator's estate and in one action consent decree was entered directing establishment of trust, parties to actions compromised held estopped to subsequently contest validity of trust, either in its inception at testator's death, or after death of trustees nominated by will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John W. Hunt, deceased. Action by Henry Gaillard Lucas and others against Fred M. Valz and another, as trustees under the will of John W. Hunt, deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wellborn, Wellborn & Wellborn, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kenyon F. Lee, of Los Angeles, and A. Pratt Adams, of Savannah, Ga. (Bradner W. Lee, Jr., of Los Angeles, Stanton Walker, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Samuel B. Adams, of Savannah, Ga., of counsel), for respondents.

HOUSER, J. The facts involved in this controversy are somewhat complicated, but so far only as relates to this decision it may be sufficient to state that by the will of John W. Hunt the residue of his estate was given, bequeathed, and devised to two named persons in trust "for the purpose of using the proceeds therefrom in establishing and maintaining such charitable and benevolent institution as they may see fit, as a memorial" to said Hunt. Following the death of the testator several different actions were brought for the ultimate purpose of testing the validity of such trust. In the federal court, where one of such actions was instituted, the identical persons (or their predecessors in interest) who are parties to the proceeding on which the instant appeal is based, were made parties, and the complaint or bill in effect included the allegation that the trust in question was void for the reason that had the trustees died or resigned, or refused to act, or disagreed, before acceptance of the trust, or after its acceptance, but before executing the terms of the will, neither the court, nor any substituted trustee appointed by the court, could administer the trust fund. Before either of said several actions was brought to a hearing, a compromise agreement was entered into among the parties to such litigation, which agreement included the recital that it was made "in settlement of all pending controversies and of all claims and demands against the estate. * * * " Thereupon it was covenanted that "the gift to establish and maintain a charitable or benevolent institution * * * be held to be a valid gift to charitable use; * * * and (after providing for the payment of all legacies mentioned in the will, together with a bonus of a sum of money to each of the respective litigants), that the balance of the estate should be applied to the establishment of the trust." With the object of carrying out the purpose hereinbefore indicated, the agreement further provided that appropriate assignments, releases, and deeds be executed by the proper parties, as well as for the execution "at any time upon request any and all other papers of whatsoever sort which may be necessary or proper for the consummation of this settlement." In complying with the express terms of the agreement, among other things, a "consent decree" was obtained from the supreme court of the state of New York, which was one of the courts having jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, and in which one of the actions between the parties was pending. One of the provisions of such decree was that "the executors of and trustees under the last will and testament of John W. Hunt, deceased, and their successors, are hereby directed to establish and maintain the charitable or benevolent institution therein provided for in accordance with said provisions of the said will." Some seven years after said agreement was executed both of the originally appointed trustees died without having actually established the "memorial" which was the object of the trust. Approximately five years after the demise of the said trustees the proceeding which is the basis for the instant appeal was commenced by the assumed heirs at law of the testator against one Valz and Citizens' & Southern Bank, a corporation (who theretofore had been appointed trustees by the superior court of the state of Georgia in lieu of the original trustees under the will), for the purpose of having the trust declared invalid on the ground that the trust was personal and confidential in its nature, and that by reason of the death of the original trustees the trust had lapsed and terminated. After an extended trial of the several issues presented by the pleadings, the lower court rendered its judgment against the plaintiffs; and this appeal is prosecuted therefrom.

Appellants make no claim that the trust attempted to be established by the will of the testator did not constitute "a lawful and valid gift for charitable purposes," as was adjudged by the New York court to which reference has been had. They do, however, by the citation of many legal principles and the adjudications of courts in various jurisdictions, seriously attack the right to the existence and enforcement of the trust following the date of the death of the originally appointed trustees. Although such points are ably presented and furnish many interesting questions of law which hitherto either have been wholly undetermined by the courts of last resort of this state, or which, as to other jurisdictions, are in an unsettled or unsatisfactory state so far as approaching unanimity of decision is concerned—because of the conclusion reached by this court as to the legal or equitable right of the plaintiffs to prosecute the proceeding in the lower court—if not altogether useless, it becomes at least inadvisable to devote the attention and energy necessary to a discussion and decision of points which may be but incidentally involved herein.

As hereinbefore indicated, the legality of the trust, so far as its attempt to create a valid gift for charitable purposes is concerned, is not at issue in this appeal. That particular feature of the original controversy, as conceded, has been compromised and settled by agreement of the parties, as well as by the adjudication of the supreme court of the state of New York.

In the case of Keating v. Smith, 154 Cal. 186, 97 P. 300, where the authorities with reference thereto are cited, the law relating to the conclusiveness of a final decree in such matters, is stated in the syllabus as follows: "Notwithstanding the invalidity of a trust attempted to be created by a will, a final decree distributing the estate to trustees upon certain trusts is a conclusive adjudication of the validity of the disposition made by the testator, and is equally conclusive as an ascertainment and adjudication of the terms of the trust, and of the rights of all parties claiming any legal or equitable interest under the will." See, also, French v. Phelps, 20 Cal. App. 101, 128 P. 772; In re Scrimger's Estate, 188 Cal. 158, 206 P. 65.

As hereinbefore noted, a compromise of the several actions pending between the parties was effected by which to all intents and purposes the plaintiffs agreed to settle, and thereby did settle, "all pending controversies and (of) all claims and demands against the estate." One of the controversies then pending, as shown by the pleadings in one of the actions between the parties, was the identical question which is presented by the plaintiffs in this proceeding. In addition thereto, the "consent" decree entered by a court having jurisdiction so to do contained the adjudication and direction that the originally appointed trustees "and their successors * * * establish and maintain the charitable or benevolent institution" provided by the will of the testator. It is the conclusion of this court that, in view of such executed agreement of the parties and the decree of court entered pursuant thereto, the plaintiffs were estopped and precluded from thereafter contesting in a court of equity or elsewhere either the validity of the trust in its inception as occurring on the demise of the testator, or after the death of the trustees nominated and appointed by the will.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WHITE et al. (Cr. 1876.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

1. Robbery ☞24(3)—Evidence held sufficient to identify defendants as persons committing robbery and firing a gun.

Evidence held sufficient to identify defendants as persons who committed robbery and one of them as man who fired gun.

2. Robbery ☞24(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for first degree robbery of filling station at point of pistol (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Evidence of robbery of filling station, during which one person was shot and wounded, held to sustain conviction for first degree robbery, under Pen. Code, § 211a.

3. Criminal law ☞1144(14)—It will be assumed, where other instructions on same subject are not properly printed in brief, that court appropriately instructed upon subject of refused requested instructions.

Where there is no compliance with rule 8, requiring that, where error is predicated upon erroneous refusal of instruction, all other instructions given bearing on subject of refused instruction must be printed in appellant's brief in full, or substance thereof clearly stated, with citation to line and page of transcript where such instructions may be found, it will be assumed on appeal that court properly instructed upon subject to which request was addressed.

4. Criminal law ☞1130(5)—Brief must present each point separately under appropriate heading showing nature of question to be presented.

Proper briefing under the rules requires that each point must be separately presented under appropriate heading showing nature of question to be presented.

5. Criminal law ☞1158(4)—Error cannot be predicated on reception of confessions, where evidence as to whether they were free and voluntary was conflicting.

Conflicting evidence as to whether confessions were free and voluntary precludes review of error assigned to their reception.

6. Witnesses ☞214—Attorney may testify as to communications with accused in presence of third person under circumstances indicating they were not intended to be confidential.

Communications by attorney for accused in presence of third person, and under circumstances indicating that they were not intended to be of confidential nature, are not privileged, and the attorney may testify to same.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Franklin W. White and another were convicted of first degree robbery, and they appeal. Affirmed.

James W. Pierce, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. On the evening of April 23, 1929, one Roy Bass was the attendant in charge of a gasoline station at Avalon boulevard and Forty-Seventh street, in the city of Los Angeles. Jack Church, a 16 year old newsboy, had come in for the purpose of asking Bass to change a bill for him. Church had $9 in hand and there was the sum of $22 in the till. Soon after the arrival of Church, and while the situation was that above stated, two men drove up to the station and committed the crimes charged in the information. Church was robbed of the $9 and was wounded by a pistol shot. Bass was robbed of the $22.

[1] Appellants contend that there is no evidence tending to connect the defendants, or either of them, with these crimes. The argument on this point rests chiefly upon the assertion that the witnesses completely failed to identify the defendants. It may be that some of the admissions made by the witnesses, such as the admission by Bass that he never saw Price's face at all, furnish some excuse for this contention. But a reading of the testimony develops at most a contradiction in the evidence. The testimony of Jack Church alone is sufficient as an identification of White and Price as the persons who committed the robbery and of Price as the man who fired the gun.

[2, 3] The next point is that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict of robbery in the first degree. In this connection complaint is made that the court refused to instruct the jury that, before they could find defendants guilty of robbery in the first degree, the jury must be satisfied, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the money was taken by the defendants from the possession of the person robbed, "at the point of the gun or that the gun was exhibited to them before the money was taken." The degrees in robbery are defined in the Penal Code as follows: "Section 211a. Degrees of Robbery. All robbery which is perpetrated by torture or by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree. All other kinds of robbery are of the second degree." The court did not err in refusing the requested instruction. Counsel for appellants have not complied in that part of rule VIII which requires that, where it is claimed that instructions requested were erroneously refused, all other instructions given, bearing upon the subjects covered by the refused instructions, must be printed in appellant's brief in full, or the substance thereof clearly stated, with citation to the line and page of the transcript where such instructions may be found. Counsel having failed to show anything to the contrary, we shall assume that somewhere within the voluminous mass of instructions given the court did appropriately instruct upon the subject of the degrees in robbery.

[4, 5] We further note that appellants in their brief have failed to comply with the rule which requires that a brief must present each point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented. Counsel have left it to the court to dig out the points from the text of the brief. The next point seems to be that certain confessions were not free and voluntary, and that the court erred in receiving them. The evidence on the subject was conflicting, and may not here be reviewed.

[6] The fourth and last point is that the court erred in overruling objections to the testimony of the witness Coen, who at the preliminary examination had appeared as attorney for the defendants. Although the brief fails to give the transcript pages where this evidence and ruling may be found, we have made the investigation. See Rep. Trans. p. 272 et seq. The court ruled that, in view of the confidential relation of attorney and client, as between the witness and defendants, the evidence of conversations between witness and defendants alone would be excluded; but further held that the witness might state conversations which he had with defendants in the presence of third persons. The evidence was given under this ruling. In this there was no error. The communications about which Coen testified were made in the presence of third persons, and under such circumstances that the court was justified in holding that they were not intended to be of a confidential nature. Such communications are not privileged. Mission Film Corporation v. Chadwick Pictures Corporation (Cal. Sup.) 278 P. 855.

The judgments and orders are affirmed. The attempted appeals from the several verdicts are dismissed for the reason that a verdict is not a proper subject of appeal.

PER CURIAM. There is some confusion in the minds of counsel for the parties hereto as to the use of the terms absolute and qualified privilege which appear in some of the decisions cited in the opinion filed herein. The privileged publications defined in subdivisions 1 and 2 of Civil Code, section 47, are called cases of absolute privilege. Those defined in subdivisions 3, 4, and 5 of that section are called cases of qualified privilege because the section expressly limits the privilege to publications made without malice. Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 64, 214 P. 968; The Hale Co. v. Lea, 191 Cal. 202, 205, 215 P. 900. A publication in a judicial proceeding is absolute because subdivision 2 gives no qualification. Appellant herein claims that the court in the case of Carpenter v. Ashley, 148 Cal. 422, 83 P. 444, 7 Ann. Cas. 601, has by judicial decision ingrafted an exception to the privilege of subdivision 2.

The expressions "not absolute and unqualified" and "not absolute but is limited" as used in the Carpenter Case, do not have the same meaning as when used in comparing the first two subdivisions of Civil Code section 47 with the other subdivisions. As used in the case cited, they simply convey the meaning that if the defamatory words "have no relation or reference to the cause in hand or to any subject matter involved therein" then such defamatory words are not in fact published in a judicial proceeding even though such defamatory words are published during the progress of a trial and in the very court room where the cause is on trial. Comparable to the Carpenter v. Ashley Case would be a decision that a publication without malice in a communication to a person interested therein would not be privileged under subdivision 3 if it was held under certain facts that the person said to be interested was not in fact interested; or that a report which had the appearance of having been published in a public journal was not in fact made in a journal which was a public one within the meaning of subdivision 4.

If a complaint pleads facts which show the publication was made in a judicial proceeding, it does not state a cause of action unless it goes further and pleads other facts which show that in contemplation of law the publication was not in fact made in a judicial proceeding although made in court. In the instant case the complaint shows both that the publication was made in court and also that it was an integral part of a judicial proceeding and that it was germane and relevant to the cause on trial within the meaning and contemplation of the law of privileged communications.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Post Veterans of Foreign Wars Convention Committee, and complaint alleging that such committee was unincorporated association of which defendants were members.

3. Pleading ⇨214(1)—On demurrer, fact allegations of complaint are to be taken as true.

Fact allegations of complaint are to be taken as true for purposes of demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Cuff Burrell against Capt. H. A. Crow Post No. 884, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Convention Committee, Percy C. Church, and another. From a judgment for defendants sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Clarence H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

B. M. Benson, of Fresno, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants Church and Neuman after an order made by the trial court sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint.

The said complaint is entitled Cuff Burrell, Plaintiff, v. Capt. H. A. Crow Post No. 884, Veterans of Foreign Wars Convention Committee, Percy C. Church, and B. A. Neuman, Defendants. It is alleged therein: That said Convention Committee at all times mentioned in the complaint was an unincorporated association of persons associated together under the fictitious name above set forth for the purpose of making arrangements for a state convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, to be held in Fresno during the month of June, 1926, and for the purpose of providing suitable entertainment and recreation for said convention. That the defendants Church and Neuman were members of said convention committee. That on June 6, 1926, as a part of said entertainment, the defendants conducted a rodeo. That for the purpose of holding said rodeo the defendants Church and Neuman entered into a contract with the plaintiff, a copy being annexed to the said complaint. By the terms thereof the plaintiff contracted to furnish certain live stock, etc., and perform other services for which the committee and Church and Neuman agreed to pay plaintiff $1,550. That the plaintiff performed all of the terms of the contract required to be performed by him. That the defendants have paid plaintiff in accordance with the terms of the agreement $563, but have failed and refused to pay the balance of $987 now due and unpaid, although demand therefor has been made of each of the defendants. The agreement is entitled Cuff Burrell, as the party of the first part, and the Captain H. A. Crow Post No. 884, Veterans of Foreign Wars Convention Committee, the party of the second part. In the body of the contract they are referred to as the "party of the first part" and "party of second part." The instrument is signed "Cuff Burrell, Party of the 1st Part" and "V. F. W. Convention Com. Party of the 2nd Part, By Percy C. Church, Party of the 2nd Part, and Bentley A. Neuman Party of 2nd Part."

[1] The only question presented for consideration and decision is this: Were the two defendants, in making the contract, acting as agents for the Captain H. A. Crow Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars or were they acting for and as members of an unincorporated association known as the Capt. H. A. Crow Post No. 884, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Convention Committee. If the former, then the said complaint fails to state a cause of action. If the latter, then a cause of action has been alleged. It is well settled that in the law of agency the question of liability under a written contract must be determined from the contract itself. 2 Cor. Jur. 671; Heringer v. Schumacher, 83 Cal. App. 349, 263 P. 550; 1 Cal. Jur., p. 821.

[2, 3] The contract purports to be made by the convention committee; no reference whatever is made to the post itself. It is specifically stated that the contract is between the plaintiff and the convention committee, and it is so signed by the committee by Church and Neuman. It does not necessarily follow that in staging a convention of a particular organization the committees in charge are either members thereof or acting under the direction of such organization. In the case at bar there is nothing whatever to show any connection between the post and the committee, except that the post was holding a state convention in Fresno. The complaint upon which this action was decided alleges that the committee was an unincorporated association of which the defendants were members, and such allegations for the purposes of the demurrer are true; therefore, under the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the said complaint states a cause of action. Zimmerman v. Prior, 46 Cal. App. 40, 188 P. 836; Leake v. City of Venice, 50 Cal. App. 462, 195 P. 440.

The demurrer was submitted with a stipulation by the parties that final judgment should be entered by the court in accordance with the decision upon the demurrer.

It is ordered that the judgment be and it is, reversed, and the cause is remanded to the trial court, with directions to overrule the demurrer of the defendants Church and Neuman to the second amended complaint, and in accordance with said stipulation to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants Church and Neuman, in accordance with the prayer of said second amended complaint.

F. E. BOOTH CO., Inc., et al. v. ZELLERBACH et al., Fish and Game Commission. (Civ. 7286.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1929.

1. Prohibition $\S$ 6(2)—Granting of permit to take fish for manufacture of edible products is administrative act, to which writ of prohibition will not run; "judicial function" (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1102).

Granting of permit by fish and game commission to take and use fish by a reduction or extraction process for manufacture of edible products was not a judicial function within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1102, but purely an administrative or executive act to which writ of prohibition would not run.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Judicial Function.]

2. Prohibition $\S$ 6(2)—Writ of prohibition will not lie as to permit by fish and game commission granted prior to issuance of alternative writ.

Where permit by fish and game commission to take and use fish by a reduction or extraction process for manufacture of edible products was granted prior to issuance of alternative writ of prohibition, the writ will not lie.

Original application by the F. E. Booth Company, Inc., and others, for an alternative writ of prohibition directed to I. Zellerbach and others, as the Fish and Game Commission. Petition denied, and restraining order discharged.

B. D. Marx Greene and Carl Westerfeld, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Eugene D. Bennett, Wm. B. Hornblower and Fabian D. Brown, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] Petitioners herein prayed for an alternative writ of prohibition, directed to I. Zellerbach, George B. Clarkson, and Reginald G. Fernald, as and constituting the fish and game commission of the state of California, and all persons acting by and through said respondents herein, directing and commanding the said respondents and each of them, their officers and agents, to desist and refrain from issuing to Globe Grain & Milling Company any permit to take and use fish by a reduction or extraction process for the manufacture of edible products, and to show cause before the above-entitled court why the said I. Zellerbach, George B. Clarkson, and Reginald G. Fernald, their officers and agents, should not be absolutely and forever restrained from taking any further or other proceedings towards granting such permit to Globe Grain & Milling Company to take and use fish by a reduction or extraction process for the manufacture of edible products, and for such other and further relief as petitioners may be entitled to.

Respondents have appeared and demurred and answered to the petition.

They claim that the granting of the permit to said Globe Grain & Milling Company, or to any other person, is not a judicial function, being purely an administrative or executive act to which the writ of prohibition will not run, and is in no way reviewable in this proceeding. Respondents also contend that the permit authorizing them to act had been granted prior to the issuance of the alternative writ, and for which further reason the writ will not lie.

We are of the opinion that respondents are correct in their contentions. Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, etc., 200 Cal. 276, 252 P. 1038; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1102; 21 Cal. Jur. 591.

The petition is denied and restraining order discharged.

PYLE et al. v. BENJAMIN. (Civ. 3863.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 20, 1929.

1. Damages $\S$ 79(1)—Court must examine circumstances attending execution, as well as terms, of contract, to determine whether it was impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damage by breach thereof, as required to authorize prior agreement on amount (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1671).

To determine whether it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damage, as required by Civ. Code, $\S$ 1671, to authorize agreement on amount of damages by parties to contract before breach thereof, court must examine attendant and surrounding circumstances under which contract was made, as well as terms of contract itself.

2. Damages $\S$ 85—Exchange contract, requiring payment of stated commission to brokers and liquidated damages for refusal to consummate contract, held void as to latter provision (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1670, 1671).

Contract for exchange of lands, providing for payment of \$800 commission to broker by parties and payment of \$100 as liquidated damages by party refusing to complete or consummate contract, held void as to provision for liquidated damages, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1670; there being no uncertainty as to amount of damages, as required by section 1671, to authorize agreement thereon by parties.

3. Exchange of property $\S$ 6—Exchange contract, giving sufficient additional time to remove defects in title, precluded default before expiration of reasonable time.

Land exchange contract, giving parties sufficient additional time to remove defects in title after expiration of time fixed for completing exchange, precluded default thereunder until expiration of at least a reasonable time for removing defects.

4. Exchange of property ¶6—Party's repudiation of exchange contract before time limit relieved other party from further performance (Civ. Code, § 1440).

Where one party to contract for exchange of land repudiated it, by refusing to carry out its terms before time fixed for completing exchange, and so notified other party, the latter was under no obligation to continue to perform his obligation, under Civ. Code, § 1440.

5. Brokers ¶60—Action for commission on land exchange contract held not barred by mutual rescission, where defendant refused, and notified other party of refusal, to perform, and never gave notice of rescission.

Action for commission on exchange of real estate held not barred by Civ. Code, § 1559, on theory that contract was rescinded, under section 1689, before action was commenced, by open, mutual abandonment thereof, where defendant refused to perform before expiration of time limit, never gave any notice of rescission, and notified other party, before expiration of reasonable further time allowed to remove defects in title, that he would not perform contract.

6. Contracts ¶267—Only party without default can rescind contract.

The right to rescind a contract rests only with the party who is without default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Hugh L. Preston, Judge.

Action by Ira D. Pyle and another against William E. Benjamin. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bryce Swartfager and Harry T. Kyle, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Wallace L. Ware and George W. Murphy, both of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. Respondents, as real estate agents, recovered judgment against appellant for $600; $500 of said judgment being for commission on the exchange of real estate and $100 for attorney's fees. From this judgment, appellant has appealed.

It appears from the evidence that about the 1st day of October, 1926, appellant called on respondents at their office and told them that he had a tract of land which he desired to sell or exchange. Through the efforts of respondents a party was found, a Mr. Fred C. Feltz, who was willing to exchange some land he owned for that of appellant, and thereafter, on October 25, 1926, appellant and said Feltz entered into a contract for the exchange of certain tracts of land owned by each, respectively, the exchange to be completed by November 1, 1926. Thereafter a new contract was entered into between them, extending the time for completing the exchange to November 15, 1926. By the terms of these contracts respondents were made the joint agents of appellant and Feltz in the said matter of exchange, and it was therein provided that, upon both appellant and Feltz signing the contracts, they would pay respondents a commission of $800, appellant's share thereof to be $500, and Feltz's share to be $300, with the further provision that if either of the parties to said contracts refused to complete or consummate the contract, or any part thereof, the party so refusing should pay said agents $100 as liquidated damages for services rendered. The said contracts also contained a provision that, in the event of a suit to enforce the collection of the commission, the party in default should pay an attorney fee of $100. The new contract also provided that the exchange was to take place on or before November 15, 1926, giving sufficient additional time to remove defects in the title, if any, to the property to be exchanged, and providing that, if such defects were not so removed or adjusted, then the party at fault should pay the said commission as agreed. The new contract was signed by respondents and appellant on November 9, 1926, and upon the following day each of them executed deeds to the other for the land to be exchanged, and said deeds were placed in escrow with the Sonoma County Abstract Bureau, to be recorded after the title to the property of each party had been corrected.

Feltz testified that on November 13, 1926, appellant called on him at the office of respondents, and asked him for the key to the property that Feltz had deeded to him, stating to Feltz that he would visit this property the next day, and would take with him, to look at said property, a party to whom there was a prospect of trading same. Feltz delivered the key to appellant, but it was never returned to him. Respondent Wright testified that he was present on November 13, 1926, when the key was delivered to appellant; that on November 14, 1926, appellant telephoned him that he would call the deal off; that he was not going through with it, and from said last-named date refused to carry through the deal for the exchange of said property; that appellant gave as his reason for said refusal that the Feltz property was too cold, too many shade trees upon it. Appellant testified that he did not change his mind about the deal until November 16, 1926, and that the reason he changed his mind and refused to go ahead with the deal was because he learned that the $5,000 mortgage or deed of trust he was to assume called for 8 per cent. interest, instead of 7 per cent.

[1, 2] Appellant assigns as error the finding of the court that upon the signing of the contract by appellant and the said Feltz, appellant agreed to pay respondents the sum of $500. He contends that, if any liability attaches by virtue of the contract, that liability would be the sum of $100, instead of $500, for the reason that it is provided in said contract that the party who refuses to complete the said contract shall pay to the agents the sum of $100 as liquidated damages for the services rendered. Section 1670 of the Civil Code declares that contracts wherein the amount of damage to be paid for breach of the obligation is determined in anticipation thereof are void to that extent, except as provided in section 1671 of said Code, and this latter section provides that parties to the contract may agree upon the amount of the damages, when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages.

In the case of McInerney v. Mack, 34 Cal. App. 153, 166 P. 867, 868, the court said: "In such action as this, as a matter of defense, defendant must show to the court by proper pleadings and competent proof that the contract falls 'within' the law permitting liquidated damages. This does not depend entirely upon the contract itself. Facts must be pleaded and proven from which the court can say as a matter of law that the contract for liquidated damages is valid, because 'from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage.'" Sherman v. Gray, 11 Cal. App. 348, 104 P. 1004; Long Beach, etc., Dist. v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 67 P. 499; Sunmaid Raisin Growers of California v. Paul A. Mosesian & Son, 90 Cal. App. 1, 265 P. 828; Hanlon Drydock, etc., Co. v. McNear, 70 Cal. App. 204, 232 P. 1002.

In the case under consideration the defendant has wholly failed to disclose, either by pleading or proof, anything to bring this alleged defense within the provision of the said section 1671 of the Civil Code. For the purpose of determining whether or not "from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage," the court must examine the attendant and surrounding circumstances under which the contract was entered into, as well as the terms of the contract itself. Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 P. 36, 25 Am. St. Rep. 102. By the terms of the contract which they each signed, the appellant and Feltz both agreed that the value of the service of respondents in bringing the deal to the point where both parties signed the contract for the exchange was the sum of $800. There could be no uncertainty as to the amount of damages respondents would sustain by the refusal of either of the parties to said contract to carry out and perform it after signing same. By the very terms of the contract respondents were entitled to receive from the contracting parties the full commission of $800 upon the signing of the contract. It therefore clearly appears that the attempt to fix the damage respondents would suffer by the failure or refusal of appellant or Feltz to complete the contract would not fall within the provisions of said section 1671 of the Civil Code, but that it does fall within the provisions of section 1670 of said code.

[3-6] Appellant next contends that respondents' cause of action is barred by section 1559 of the Civil Code, upon the theory that, the contract having been made for the benefit of respondents, they not being parties thereto, it was rescinded before this action was commenced. The said section 1559 is as follows: "A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." Section 1689 of the Civil Code sets forth the conditions under which a party to a contract may rescind it. These conditions are contained in five subdivisions of said section. Appellant does not indicate in his brief under which of those subdivisions the alleged rescission resulted. He simply states that the contract of exchange was rescinded before November 25, 1927, the date this action was commenced, and that this rescission was effectuated by the open, mutual abandonment of the contract, made manifest by the conduct and action of the parties.

The court found that at the time said contract was executed, and for many months subsequent thereto, the said Feltz was ready, able, and willing to make the exchange, and to perform all the terms and covenants of said contract, agreed by him to be performed, but that on the 14th day of November, 1926, appellant refused, and ever since then has refused, to make the exchange, or to perform any of the terms, covenants, and conditions of said contract which he agreed to perform, and this finding is supported by substantial evidence. Appellant never at any time gave any notice of the rescission of said contract. He admits that he told respondent Wright, on November 18, 1926, that he would not carry out the contract, and had his attorney, on November 30, 1926, appear at the office of the Sonoma County Abstract Bureau, with whom his deed was deposited in escrow, and mark across the face of said deed the word "Canceled." He claims, however, as justifying his repudiation of the contract, that Feltz had not removed all defects from the title to the land which Feltz was deeding him, as by the terms of said contract Feltz was required to do.

Admitting that this was true, yet the contract, while providing that the time limit was November 15, 1926, also provided that either of said parties was given sufficient additional time to remove such defects, and therefore neither of them could have been in default under said contract until at least a reasonable time for removing the defects had expired. Then, again, the trial court having found, upon substantial evidence, that appellant, on the 14th day of November, 1926, which was prior to the time limit named in the contract, had breached and repudiated it by refusing to carry out its terms, and had so notified the said Feltz through his agent, the said Feltz was under no obligation to continue to perform his obligations thereunder. Section 1440, Civ. Code; Donlon v. Meyer, 35 Cal. App. 225, 169 P. 447; Mulborn v. Montezuma Imp. Co., 69 Cal. App. 621, 232 P. 162. There is no evidence upon which appellant can base the claim that the contract was rescinded. Respondents did not rescind it, or in any way attempt to do so. Even had appellant attempted to rescind the contract, he could not have done so after he breached and repudiated it. The rule is general that the right to rescind a contract rests only with the party who is without default. Fairchild, etc., Co. v. Southern, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 264, 110 P. 951; California Sugar, etc., Association v. Penoyar, 167 Cal. 274, 139 P. 671; North American Co. v. Outer Harbor Co., 178 Cal. 406, 173 P. 756.

There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the court erred in overruling his demurrer.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 10, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1930.

1. Carriers ⇨320(4)—Evidence presented jury issue whether conductor, who, in boarding street car, knocked down prospective passenger, boarded car to relieve conductor thereon.

In action against street railroad for injuries to prospective passenger, when conductor, waiting to relieve conductor on approaching street car, in attempting to board car before it stopped, knocked plaintiff down, evidence held sufficient to present jury issue whether purpose of conductor in boarding car at that place was to relieve conductor on street car, and whether former immediately took charge of the car, on issue whether accident occurred while he was acting within scope of his employment.

2. Carriers ⇨283(1)—If conductor boarded street car to take immediate charge thereof, he was acting within scope of employment while boarding car.

If conductor boarded street car before it stopped for purpose of taking immediate charge thereof, and to relieve conductor thereon, he was acting within scope of employment, and street car company would be liable for his negligence in knocking down prospective passenger while boarding car.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Mary Cromwell against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles (Philip C. Sterry, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

William A. Freeman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The following statement is taken from appellant's opening brief:

"This is an appeal from an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action is for damages for alleged injuries sustained by plaintiff at the intersection of Third and Spring streets, while she was waiting in the safety zone to board a southbound car. This car was in charge of Conductor Boehm. He was to be relieved by Conductor Groth at Ninth and Spring, though occasionally, as a matter of accommodation to Mr. Boehm, Groth would relieve him at Fifth and Spring. As the car approached, Groth was standing in the street slightly to the left of the plaintiff, and as the rear steps of the car reached him, and before it stopped, he attempted to board the car, and in doing so struck the plaintiff, knocking her down, and inflicting some injuries upon her. Plaintiff, in her complaint, charged that the negligence of the defendant consisted in the fact that the conductor upon the car, the servant and agent of the defendant, was standing on the steps of the car and negligently swung his body out and away from the car.

"While we do not agree with the views of the learned court as to the weight of the evidence on the issues of negligence and contributory negligence, we do not intend to challenge them on this appeal. We concede that, if the act of Groth in boarding the car can be held to have been within the scope of his employment as a matter of law, or as a question of fact for the determination of the jury, the order granting a new trial should be affirmed. We believe, however, that Groth's act in attempting to board the car must be held as a matter of law not to have been within the scope of his employment."

[1] The foregoing statement, commendably frank and fair, relieves the court of the necessity of passing upon any question except the single one of whether the evidence shows, as a matter of law, that Groth was acting outside the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The plaintiff testified:

"When this man [Groth] helped me in the car [after the accident], he took his place as the conductor—back of the fare box. I am not sure whether this was before or after the car left Third and Spring. I saw him take his place, but I could not tell whether just exactly on the minute whether he rang the bell and started the car or not; I don't know, but it was before we reached Fourth street. The conductor that had been on the car got off, either at Fourth street or just before we got there; when I got on the car before it started, he was getting around in front of the cash box. When the conductor who helped me on the car took his place back of the cash box, I did not see him exchange any transfers with the other conductor. I was so nearly fainting I could not notice things like that. I could not say positively that he collected any fares. I was not watching him."

Another witness testified:

"The conductor got in with Mrs. Cromwell. He took my fare as I entered the car. * * * After the conductor who struck Mrs. Cromwell got on the car, he just took fares. I saw another conductor on this car. He got off after I boarded the car. I don't know whether he got off at Third or Fourth street. I did not pay any attention to that. * * * When I paid my fare, I dropped it in the box. I didn't give it to the conductor. * * * I saw the conductor whom Mr. Groth relieved get off the car; he got off either at Third or Fourth street. I know he got off. I cannot state positively whether he was on the car when we reached Fifth and Spring; he got off at Third or Fourth street, according to my recollection. I saw no other conductor behind the fare box, other than Mr. Groth. I don't remember seeing the other conductor at all. He was standing at the side when I paid my fare. * * * I saw Mr. Groth behind the cash box when I paid my fare. I think the other conductor got off the car at Third and Spring streets."

Both of the conductors testified that Boehm was relieved by Groth at Fifth and Spring streets, and that the former "continued to collect fares and issue transfers on the car from Third street to Fifth street."

It cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the foregoing evidence is insufficient to warrant the inference that Groth boarded the car at Third street for the purpose of there relieving Boehm, and that the former immediately took charge of the car. The question to be determined on this appeal, for the purposes of the appeal, is whether Groth, in boarding the car for the purpose stated, was acting within the scope of his employment. Appellant cites cases arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act to the effect that, while an employee is traveling to and from his place of employment, he is not acting within the scope of his employment. But in this case Groth had reached the place of his employment, if the evidence produced by the plaintiff is true, and was entering the car by a means of access provided by his employer.

"It is not necessary, in order to entitle the employee to compensation, that at the time of accident he have reached the place of employment and have actually begun there to render service. It is sufficient if he has come to the employer's premises and is seeking entrance thereto by a means of access provided by the employer or reasonably used by the employee. * * * On the other hand, it is not doubted that if the employee is merely on his way to his employment and is injured, the injury is not one sustained in the course of his employment." Starr Piano Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 433, 435, 184 P. 860; Makins v. Industrial Acc. Com., 198 Cal. 698, 701, 247 P. 202, 49 A. L. R. 411.

"The employment may begin in point of time before the work is entered upon and in point of space before the place where the work is to be done is reached. Probably, as a general rule, employment may be said to begin when the employee reaches the entrance to the employer's premises where the work is to be done." Bountiful Brick Co. v. Giles, 276 U. S. 154, 48 S. Ct. 221, 72 L. Ed. 507.

[2] Under the cases cited, it is clear that, if Groth was boarding the car for the purpose of taking immediate charge thereof, he was acting within the scope of his employment.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

Where lot was sold for delinquent street improvement assessments, and lot owner's name and address were matters of general public record, they being found on records of assessor and of tax collector of city of Long Beach and of Los Angeles county and in telephone directory of Los Angeles, but search was made only in directories of Long Beach where lot was located, and inquiry was made of adjoining lot owner without success, and notice to redeem was posted on lot, and lot was thereafter conveyed to defendant, evidence did not show exercise of due diligence required in such cases, and plaintiff owner was not deprived of his property.

2. Quietting title ⇨12(8)—Maintenance of title to vacant realty does not depend on proof of possession.

Maintenance of title to vacant realty is not dependent on proof of actual and notorious possession.

Action to quiet title by Walter B. Sim against O. M. Peterson and others. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Samuel J. Crawford, of Ocean Park, and Joseph Hansen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. Certain uncontroverted facts may be stated in this case. It appears that on May 5, 1910, John F. Brachman and wife conveyed to Walter B. Sim and Alexander Sim lot 16 of the Euclid avenue tract, in the city of Long Beach, and that on November 13, 1911, the latter conveyed to said Walter B. Sim his undivided one-half interest therein. On December 5, 1924, the lot was sold for delinquent street improvement assessments; on November 23, 1925, one C. D. Warden made affidavit that he had made inquiry of the county assessor, and of one of Sim's adjoining owners, and had searched the current directories of the city of Long Beach, but was unable to ascertain his address or whereabouts, and that he posted upon said lot a notice to redeem. On December 30, 1925, the director of public service conveyed the property to O. M. Peterson. Walter B. Sim instituted this proceeding to quiet title as against Mrs. Peterson, and was awarded a decree, from which she appealed.

[1] From the testimony and documentary evidence it appears that plaintiff's name and address at the time of the alleged search and making of the affidavit mentioned were matters of general public record. They were to be found upon the records of the assessor and of the tax collector of the city of Long Beach and of the tax collector and tax assessor of Los Angeles county, and in the telephone directory of the city of Los Angeles. Warden admitted that he merely inquired of a clerk at the counter in the assessor's office for the name of the owner, but was unable to testify that he asked for the address or referred to the records for this information. Received tax bills for the years 1920 to 1925, both inclusive, bearing respondent's name and address, were introduced in evidence. The affidavit of Warden merely recited that the lot in question was vacant and unoccupied, that he searched the Long Beach city and telephone directories, inquired of a person residing upon an adjoining lot as to Sim's whereabouts, and did "not know of any other place or person of whom to make inquiry." The evidentiary foundation requisite to a valid conveyance must fully measure up to statutory requirements. There is here an absence of proof of the exercise of due diligence required in such cases, and the trial court was right in holding that consequently the owner cannot be deprived of his property. Hennessy v. Hall, 14 Cal. App. 759, 113 P. 350.

[2] Appellant asserts that the want of showing of actual possession or of derivation of title from an owner in possession requires that the judgment be reversed. The maintenance of title to vacant realty is not dependent upon proof of actual and notorious possession. Denning v. Green, 88 Cal. App. 379, 263 P. 819.

[3] It is strenuously insisted that, respondent having failed to establish the fact last mentioned, or to offer proof of title by grant from the state, the rule requiring that he rely upon the strength of his own, rather than upon the weakness of his adversary's title, precludes a recovery in this case, and that the judgment for that reason should not be sustained. However, the plaintiff, having proved legal title by purchase and its maintenance in all respects, except as to the assessment in controversy, established ownership subject to a lien followed by a questionable sale. The burden shifted to the defendant upon the appearance of defects in the proceedings upon which his prima facie title was dependent. Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 P. 1007; Stoddart v. Burge, 53 Cal. 394. Any such rule must necessarily presume the existence of facts which are by statute made indispensable to its assertion, and is not available to one whose own showing corroborates evidence strongly tending to indicate their nonexistence.

The decree of the trial court is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FYFE. (Cr. 1553.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 31, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 13, 1930.

1. Criminal law ☞1163(1)—State appealing from judgment of dismissal, entered after oral notice of appeal from order allowing demurrer to information, must show error causing miscarriage of justice.

As superior court had jurisdiction to enter judgment of dismissal after oral notice of appeal from order allowing demurrer to amended information, it was incumbent on state to show on appeal from such judgment that it was error resulting in miscarriage of justice.

2. Indictment and information ☞122(2)—Defendant cannot be tried on information not supported by evidence at preliminary hearing (Const. art. 1, § 8; Pen. Code, § 1008).

The purpose of Const. art. 1, § 8, and Pen. Code § 1008 as amended by St. 1911, p. 436, was to give accused preliminary hearing before grand jury or committing magistrate and deny district attorney right to force him to trial before jury on either original or amended information not within scope of evidence taken at such hearing.

3. Indictment and information ☞122(2)—Evidence at preliminary examination held not to warrant information for procuring loan through false representations of assets and false promises of payment therefrom.

Uncontradicted evidence taken at preliminary examination held to preclude trial of defendant on amended information charging procurement of loan through false representations as to his assets and false promises that loan would be paid therefrom at maturity.

4. Indictment and information ☞122(2)—Statute prohibiting amendment of information to charge offense not shown by evidence at preliminary examination is mandatory (Pen. Code, § 1008).

Pen. Code, § 1008, declaring that information "cannot" be amended so as to charge an offense not shown by evidence taken at preliminary examination, is mandatory.

5. Indictment and information ☞122(2)—Count of amended information charging grand theft held insufficient, in view of allegation that count for obtaining money by false pretenses, not supported by evidence at preliminary examination, charged same offense (Pen. Code, §§ 484, 952, as amended by St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1043).

First count of amended information charging grand theft held insufficient, notwithstanding amendments to Pen. Code, §§ 484, 952, by St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1043, in view of allegation that offense of obtaining money by false pretenses charged in second count which was not supported by evidence at preliminary examination, is different statement of same offense set forth in first count.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Joseph Fyfe, Jr., was charged with grand theft and obtaining money under false pretenses, and, from a judgment of dismissal, the State appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Mathew Brady, Dist. Atty., and William W. Murphy, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for the People.

Maxwell McNutt, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The state appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after defendant's demurrer was allowed to a second amended information.

On June 15, 1928, an information was filed charging the defendant with the crime of obtaining $3,000 by false pretenses. This information alleged that on or about the 8th day of July, 1925, the defendant made certain representations to Max L. Rosenfeld as to his ownership of stocks and contracts, some of which were alleged to have been false, and that, relying upon said representations, the said Rosenfeld delivered to the defendant the sum of $3,000. A demurrer to this information was sustained upon the authority of People v. Canfield, 28 Cal. App. 792, 154 P. 33, and other cases holding that an information is insufficient when it fails to show a casual connection between the payment of the money and the representation.

Leave to amend having been granted, the district attorney on August 11, 1928, filed an amended information framed in two counts, the first charging grand theft of the sum of $15,000, in the language of section 484, Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1046) and the second count charging the offense of obtaining $15,000 by false pretenses. A demurrer to the first amended information was also sustained with leave to amend, and on June 10, 1929, the district attorney filed his second amended information which was also framed in two counts. The first count charged grand theft and the second obtaining money under false pretenses. To this information the defendant demurred and also filed a motion to set it aside. The demurrer and the motion were heard at the same time, and on July 10, 1929, the court made its order allowing the demurrer as to both counts, and denying defendant's motion to set aside the information. At the time the order allowing the demurrer was made in open court the district attorney gave oral notice of appeal therefrom. Thereafter formal judgment was entered reciting that the demurrer was heard upon the ground that the second amended information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that it attempted to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination and ordering the dismissal of the proceedings and the discharge of the defendant. It would appear that the state assumes that its appeal was taken from the judgment as the order is not an appealable one under the provisions of section 1238, Penal Code. We assume this to be the position, because no point is raised as to the notice of appeal, and the record presented by the state contains a complete bill of exceptions of all the evidence taken before the committing magistrate as well as a record of the evidence before the grand jury. This evidence has been brought up in an endeavor to meet the objection to the second amended information which charges an offense the evidence of which was not taken at the preliminary examination, and in the briefs the state concedes that there are but two issues presented on the appeal, one whether the information charges a public offense, and the second whether the offense charged is one not shown by the testimony at the preliminary examination.

Such being the case, all questions relating to the sufficiency of the original and first amended informations and the question of the application of the statute of limitations may be disregarded, because, if the second amended information attempts to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination, it should not have been filed. This follows from the express provisions of section 1008, Penal Code, declaring that an information "cannot be amended" so as to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination. Therefore, disregarding the question whether this issue can be raised by a demurrer to an amended information and treating the question as one which comes to us on an appeal from the final judgment of dismissal, we are confronted with the question whether this judgment should be affirmed or reversed.

[1] Inasmuch as the trial court has jurisdiction to enter a judgment of dismissal, it is incumbent upon the state on this appeal to show that that judgment was error which has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Thus, again, assuming that the appeal was properly taken from the final judgment of dismissal, that judgment must be affirmed unless the appellant is able to show that some error has crept into the judgment which has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2] The rights of the defendant in a case of this kind are statutory. Section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution provides that offenses "shall be prosecuted by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment. * * *" Section 1008, Penal Code, as it read in 1880 provided that when a demurrer was allowed to an indictment, the trial court might direct the case to be resubmitted to the grand jury or direct a new information to be filed, provided that after the order of resubmission the defendant may be examined before a magistrate. In 1911 this section was amended (St. 1911, p. 436), adding the proviso that an information could not be amended so as to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination. The clear purpose of these enactments is to give the accused a preliminary hearing either before a grand jury or before a committing magistrate, and to deny to the district attorney the right to force a defendant to trial before a jury upon an information which is not within the scope of the evidence taken.

[3] The case presented here on the part of the respondent is that the second amended information states a charge not disclosed by the evidence, in that it purports to charge that the defendant procured a loan of $15,000 from Rosenfeld through false representations as to his assets and false promises that they were sufficient to insure the repayment of the loan at its maturity, and that said loan would be repaid at maturity out of such assets. Now the undisputed and conceded facts as developed at the preliminary examination are that no such transaction occurred at all, but on the other hand the admitted facts are that Rosenfeld and defendant were lifelong friends who had been associated in numerous business transactions, and that for some time prior to July, 1925, defendant had frequently informed Rosenfeld of his financial difficulties, and that he had suggested to Rosenfeld the organization of a new corporation for the purpose of carrying on the business of selling lumber on commissions. The defendant informed Rosenfeld that $15,000 would be needed for this purpose; that the defendant was obligated to such an extent that $7,500 would have to be used immediately for the payment of outstanding indebtedness, and that the remaining $7,500 would be needed to finance any accounts which would have to be carried while the business was being started. Numerous letters were exchanged between the parties, all showing unmistakably that Rosenfeld knew the financial condition of the defendant, and notwithstanding such condition he planned to go into business with him. The arrangements for the loan were evidenced by the written offer and acceptance dated July 7, 1925, which reads as follows: "San Francisco, July 7, 1925, Tuesday. Mr. Max Rosenfeld, San Francisco, California. Dear Sir: In consideration of your advancing $15,000 of which $7,500 is to be retained in the company and $7,500 paid out on old accounts which we wish to pay, it is understood that the writer will give you his one-day note, at six per cent. up to $15,000, or whatever amount is advanced, and insurance policies up to $20,000. We will incorporate a company in which you will have one-third of the stock and the writer will have two-thirds of the stock, but he will put his two-thirds of the stock up as collateral security on the above note. It is understood that you are to draw $300 monthly salary as an official and the writer is to draw $600 monthly salary as an official, and that we are to keep the overhead expense as low as possible. All dividends on all stock up to $15,000 to be applied to liquidate the above mentioned note and interest before any other dividends are paid out, and meanwhile the writer will keep up the premiums personally on the insurance in your favor. Neither party is to dispose of his stock without the consent of the other, and this agreement to be binding on their heirs for six years from date. In the event of any difference of opinion, same to be left to Mr. Henry Rosenfeld to settle, and his decision to be final. Yours very truly, Joseph F. Fyfe, Jr. J. F. S. Accepted: Max F. Rosenfeld." In explanation of the writing, testimony was given by the complaining witness Max Rosenfeld and by Henry Rosenfeld, his brother, showing that the insurance policies mentioned in the writing and the defendant's share of the stock in the company to be incorporated were the only collateral ever suggested or contemplated as security for the loan. The evidence undisputedly shows that the defendant did not at any time suggest or offer to put up any of his other assets as security for the loan, but on the other hand there is not so much as a conflict in the evidence that the complaining witness entered into this business agreement with the defendant fully informed as to the conditions and with the expectation of repayment out of the profits of the corporation which was to be formed.

In face of this uncontradicted evidence it is inconceivable that a district attorney should allege that the defendant represented and promised "all of said shares of stock and contracts and the values thereof and the said indebtedness to him, the said Joseph Fyfe, Jr., was and were and would be security to said Max L. Rosenfeld for the repayment of said loan at its maturity; that each and all of the said shares of stock and said contracts and agreements and the said indebtedness to him the said Joseph Fyfe, Jr., were then and there such that the said loan of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) might and could be repaid therefrom by him, the said Joseph Fyfe, Jr., to said Max L. Rosenfeld, at the maturity of said loan, and said Joseph Fyfe, Jr., did then and there request of said Max L. Rosenfeld a loan in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) upon the security aforesaid." The vice of the pleading is particularly patent from the fact that the maturity of the loan was evidenced by a one-day note whereby the written contract of the parties provided for the future payments out of the profits of the corporation to be formed.

[4] The procedure followed in this case is concrete evidence of the purpose and wisdom of the provisions of section 1008, Penal Code, which expressly prohibit an amendment to an information which would prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant. In declaring that an information "cannot" be amended so as to charge an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination, the terms of the section are mandatory. They are in whole harmony with the provisions of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution requiring an examination and commitment by a magistrate as a prerequisite to the filing of an information by the district attorney. We had occasion to consider the provision of the code in Mitchell v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. App. 734, 737, 245 P. 1109, where it is said that, where the information fails to plead some material element in the alleged offense which goes to the substantial rights of the defendant, "no amendment, in the proper use of that expression, can be made." But in such a case "the statute provides that the trial court may order the cause resubmitted to the grand jury, and in that event the statute authorizes the prosecuting officer so to proceed as to get another indictment returned or cause another examination to be held and later file another information. People v. Cockrill, 62 Cal. App. 22, 216 P. 78, 81. But in no proper sense can it be said that when the second pleading comes in it is within the contemplation of the statute an amended indictment or an amended information, but it is a new indictment or a new information."

[5] There is some argument in the briefs to the point that because of recent amendments to sections 484 and 952 of the Penal Code (St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1043) the first count in the amended information charging grand theft is sufficient and that, therefore, the demurrer to that count should have been overruled. If the information contained the first count of grand theft only, there would be some merit to the point, but the pleading contained the allegation that "the offense set forth in the second count of this information is a different statement of the same offense set forth in the first count hereof." Because of this allegation we must read the first count as pleading the offense of grand theft under the particular facts and circumstances set forth in the second count. It is not a question, therefore, of the sufficiency of the pleading to state a public offense against this defendant. The sole question which we pass on is the propriety of the judgment of dismissal which was based upon the ground that the amended information pleaded an offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination, but was filed contrary to the provisions of the code, and that there was, therefore, no information before the court upon which the defendant could be tried.

Judgment affirmed.

SONOMA COUNTY v. DE WINTON.*
(Civ. 3847.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 25, 1930.

1. Eminent domain $\S$ 124—Where condemnation proceeding commenced in August, 1927, was not tried until December, 1928, damages held ascertainable as of date of trial (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1249).

Where condemnation proceeding was commenced on August 17, 1927, and was tried on December 17, 1928, damage to land not taken held ascertainable as of date of trial by stipulation and under express provision of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1249.

2. Eminent domain $\S$ 204—Evidence showing benefit held not objectionable on ground that condemnor could not offset damage to landowner by benefit arising through trespass, there being no evidence of trespass.

Permitting county in condemnation proceedings to produce evidence showing benefit conferred on land not taken for construction of road held not objectionable on ground that county was trespasser and therefore could not offset any damage to landowner by benefit conferred arising through trespass, where there was no evidence that county was trespasser.

3. Judgment $\S$ 720—Judgment roll, in landowner's action to enjoin county from using road, held admissible in condemnation proceeding to show whether county had constructed road with landowner's permission (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1908, subd. 2, and $\S$ 1911).

In condemnation proceedings by county, judgment roll, in action by landowner to enjoin county from using land sought to be condemned, held admissible to show whether county had constructed road with landowner's permission, since Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1908, by subdivision 2, provides that judgment is conclusive in respect to matters adjudicated, and by section 1911 that only is deemed to have been adjudicated in former action which appears on its face to have been so adjudicated or which was actually and necessarily included therein.

4. Judgment $\S$ 720—That judgment may constitute estoppel against parties thereto, it must appear that identical questions are involved.

That judgment in one action may constitute an estoppel against parties thereto in subsequent action it must be made to appear, either on face of record or by extrinsic evidence, that identical questions involved in issues to be tried were determined in former action.

5. Eminent domain $\S$ 124—Where condemnation proceeding was tried more than year after commencement thereof, landowner's instruction to assess damages as of date of commencement held properly refused.

Where county's condemnation proceedings were commenced on August 17, 1927, and was tried December 17, 1928, refusing landowner's requested instruction to assess damages as of date of commencement of action instead as of date of trial held proper.

6. Eminent domain $\S$ 221—Refusing landowner's requested instruction that county constructed road without his permission held proper, where evidence was otherwise.

Landowner's requested instruction, which told jury that county had constructed road over land without owner's consent, held properly refused, where only evidence was that road was constructed with owner's permission.

7. Eminent domain $\S$ 223—Landowner waived jury's failure to assess benefit to land not taken by not making request therefor when verdict was returned (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 619, 1248).

Landowner held to have waived requirement of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1248, that jury assess amount of benefit to land not taken by county under right of eminent domain by failure to inform the court at time verdict was returned that he desired specification of amount of such benefit, since under section 619, if verdict is insufficient in not covering issues submitted, jury may be sent out again.

8. Eminent domain $\S$ 223—Landowner's instruction that jury might deduct amount of benefit from damages to land waived right to require that jury assess amount of benefit (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1248).

Landowner held to have waived requirements of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1248, that jury assess amount of benefit to land not taken under right of eminent domain by instruction that benefit by reason of construction of road could be deducted from damages to land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the County of Sonoma against W. W. De Winton. From a judgment for an amount less than sum demanded, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fabius T. Finch, of San Francisco, and Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Carl Barnard, of Santa Rosa, and E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by respondent to condemn a right of way for a county road over the land of appellant. The issues as to the value of the land taken, severance damage, and benefit to the land not taken, were submitted to a jury which returned a verdict in favor of appellant for the sum of $354 for the land taken and no damages for the severance from the land not taken. From the judgment rendered upon this verdict appellant has appealed. This appeal was brought upon a bill of exceptions. Appellant produced evidence tending to prove that the land taken was of the value of $1,500; that the damage to the land not taken by reason of the severance was from $25,000 to $45,360; and that no benefit was derived by the land not taken by virtue of the construction of the road. Appellant then offered in evidence the judgment roll in the action of appellant against respondent, theretofore tried and determined. It appears from this judgment roll that this last-named action grew out of an agreement entered into between appellant and respondent in the year 1919, by the terms of which appellant agreed, in consideration of the sum of $250, to grant to respondent a right of way 40 feet wide over and across his land; respondent agreeing to construct a road on said right of way within a year from the date of said contract. Respondent did some work toward opening up a roadway on said right of way, but did not complete said road within the year, nor pay appellant the said $250, nor, as claimed by appellant, did respondent place the road where it had agreed to place it. It appears, however, that respondent continued to use the road so far as same was then constructed as a public road; that on August 15, 1922, respondent still desiring to secure the right of way for said road over appellant's land, and respondent and appellant being unable to agree as to the amount of compensation that should be paid appellant for same, agreed to submit the matter to arbitration, and thereupon selected arbitrators to determine the said compensation. The arbitrators so selected placed the compensation that should be paid to appellant by respondent for said right of way at $500. Thereupon, appellant executed a deed to respondent for said right of way and placed same in escrow to be delivered to respondent upon the completion of said road and upon payment to him of said sum of $500. Thereafter, about the year 1924, respondent practically completed the construction of the road, but failed and neglected to pay appellant the said sum of $500. On October 25, 1925, appellant commenced an action against respondent, reciting in his complaint the aforesaid facts, and demanding that respondent be enjoined from the further use and occupation of said right of way, and for damages for injuries caused to appellant's land by the construction of said road. Upon the trial of the issues involved in that action judgment was rendered in favor of appellant enjoining respondent from the further use of said road, and for damages in the sum of $100. This judgment was rendered July 21, 1927, and the present action was commenced on August 11, 1927. The strip of land sought to be condemned by the present action is the same strip over which the road was theretofore constructed. When the said judgment roll was offered in evidence, the attorney for appellant suggested to the court that it be considered as a record to the court, and not to the jury, for the reason that the said judgment roll consisted of long documents which would be difficult for the jury to follow, and that the court should, in its instructions to the jury, set forth the legal effect of said judgment roll, or such portions as might be applicable to the case; and to this suggestion the attorney for respondent assented. The record then recites that the judgment roll was thereupon admitted in evidence under the aforesaid circumstances and for said purposes. Respondent then produced testimony as to the value of the land taken, and also evidence as to the benefit conferred upon the property not taken by the construction of the road. The entire tract of land owned by appellant through which the right of way runs is twenty acres, and the amount within the said right of way is 1.4 acres.

Appellant does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. He maintains, however, that the court erred in admitting certain evidence, and in giving and refusing to give certain instructions herein-after referred to, and that the verdict of the jury upon which the judgment is based is incomplete and insufficient to support the judgment.

[1] It was stipulated by the parties to the present action that the right of way sought to be condemned in this action follows the lines of the road constructed by respondent under the agreement of 1919. And it was also stipulated that the value of the appellant's land sought to be taken by the present action and damages to land not taken should be ascertained as of the date of the trial, to-wit, December 17, 1928. This last stipulation was unnecessary for the reason that section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that where the issue is not tried within one year from the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay was caused by the defendant, and in this case there is no evidence of any such delay, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial. This action was commenced August 17, 1927, and was tried December 17, 1928.

[2] Appellant contends that the court erred in permitting respondent, over his objection, to produce evidence tending to show the value of the benefit conferred upon the land not taken by reason of the construction of said road. He bases this contention upon the ground that respondent, at all times since it began the construction of said road, has been a trespasser on his said lands, and therefore cannot offset any damage to which appellant may be entitled by proof of benefits conferred upon the land arising by or through the trespass. He cites several cases in his effort to support this contention. The one upon which he appears mainly to rely is that of Pinney v. Borough of Winsted, 83 Conn. 411, 76 A. 994, 20 Ann. Cas. 923. This was a case where the town wrongfully entered upon Pinney's land and constructed a street thereon without condemnation proceedings and without Pinney's consent. Pinney brought an action against the town for damages arising from this trespass. The case was tried upon the theory that the taking was permanent. No proof was offered by the town tending to show that the construction of the street benefited the remaining land. Judgment was given the plaintiff for the value of his land that was taken, only. However, in that case the court held that even if benefits had been proven, they could not have been offset against plaintiff's judgment, for the reason that the law is well established that a trespasser cannot, when compensation is sought for his trespass, be heard to say, in his defense, that he has benefited plaintiff by his wrongful act. These cases are not in point for the reason that there is no evidence produced or offered in this case now being considered, tending to prove that respondent was a trespasser in the construction of the road. Appellant states in his opening brief that the judgment roll in the former case was introduced in this case to establish facts which had previously been adjudicated and determined in the former case and had therefore become res adjudicata. Admitting that to be true, then in that event, so far as appellant's claim that respondent was a trespasser in constructing said road is concerned, he has, by his own act, in introducing the judgment roll in evidence "hoisted himself by his own petard," for in that case we find that the court specifically found that respondent went upon appellant's land and took possession of the said land, in the year 1919, by permission of appellant, and since that date has continuously used same as a public highway, by and with such permission. The objection to the introduction of this evidence was properly overruled.

[3, 4] Appellant also claims that the court erred in giving instruction No. 5, which was given by the court of its own motion. By this instruction the jury was told that the judgment roll in the former action was admitted in evidence upon the issue joined by the allegation contained in the complaint in the instant action, to the effect that respondent entered upon appellant's land and constructed said road with his permission, and appellant's denial thereof and assertion that an injunction was granted appellant in the former action because permission was not granted to construct the roadway exactly as it was constructed. That issue being thus joined on this allegation permitted the reception in evidence of said judgment roll, but that this did not alter the issue which the jury was to determine, namely, the market value of the land sought to be condemned, and the damage, if any, to the remaining land by severance of the land sought to be condemned from the remainder of the tract. Apparently, the object the court had in view in giving this instruction was to inform the jury, complying with appellant's suggestion made at the time said judgment roll was admitted in evidence, of the extent to which the jury should give consideration to the said judgment roll in the determination of the issues before it. In the former trial no issues were involved regarding the value of the land occupied by the road, nor of damages to the land not taken by reason of severance therefrom of the land occupied by the road, nor of benefits conferred upon the land not taken by the construction of the road. It appears to have been an action to enjoin respondent from further occupying or using said road because it had failed to perform its agreements thereto relating, and for damages arising from such failure. By section 1908 of subdivision 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the effect of a judgment is conclusive in respect to the matters adjudicated, and by section 1911 of said Code, that only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former action which appears on its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto. In order that a judgment in one action may constitute an estoppel against the parties thereto in a subsequent action, it must be made to appear, either upon the face of the record or by extrinsic evidence, that the identical questions involved in the issues to be tried were determined in the former action. Beronio v. Ventura County Lumber Co., 129 Cal. 232, 61 P. 958, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118; Agnifili v. Lagna (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 705. We are unable to see wherein appellant was in any way injured by the giving of this instruction.

[5, 6] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give his proposed instructions Nos. 1 and 2. Instruction No. 1 was properly refused: First, because it required the jury to assess the damages as of the date of the commencement of the action, instead as of the date of the trial of the action; and, secondly, because it told the jury that respondent had constructed the road over appellant's land without his consent, whereas, the only evidence upon that point was contained in the findings of the court in the former trial introduced by appellant himself, and those findings clearly and positively set forth that this road had been constructed by respondent by permission of appellant, and for this last reason, instruction No. 2 was properly refused.

[7, 8] Lastly, appellant contends that the judgment in the present action is void for the reason that the jury failed to find by its verdict the amount of the benefit which the land not taken will receive by the construction of the road. Section 1248, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the court or jury must ascertain and assess, first, the value of the land taken; second, the damage which will accrue to the land not taken by reason of the severance, and third, the benefit, if any, which the construction of the road may be to the land not taken. The verdict of the jury was in the following words: "We, the jury in the above entitled action, render the following verdict: Question No. 1. What is the value of the strip of land of defendant W. W. De Winton, sought to be condemned by plaintiff? Answer, $354.00. Question No. 2. What is the damage, if any, to the balance of the land not sought to be condemned by reason of its severance from the land sought to be condemned by plaintiff? Answer. None." Appellant cites cases from other states, notably, Michigan and Colorado, to the effect that the aforesaid requirements are mandatory, and calls attention to the case of Butte County v. Boydston, 64 Cal. 110, 29 P. 511, which he claims supports this contention. In this latter case no assessment of the value of the land taken, nor damages to that not taken, nor benefits, by the improvement, to the land not taken, were assessed at all, nor payment, or tender of compensation made, and under those circumstances the court held that the owner could not be deprived of his land, and that any judgment rendered against him would be illegal and void, while at the same time the court said: "But the value of the land, the damage, if any, and the benefit, if any, must be separately assessed, in order that the compensation may be adjudged and paid." While section 1248 of the Code of Civil Procedure plainly requires that the value of the land taken, the damage to that not taken, and the benefit, if any, to the remaining land should be separately stated, yet in this case we find that the omission from the verdict of the value of the benefit to the remaining land by the construction of the road was mainly brought about by appellant himself.

Instruction No. 24, which was given to the jury at the request of appellant, reads in part as follows: "If you believe that Mr. De Winton's property, on either or both sides of the proposed right of way, has sustained any special benefit by reason of the construction of this road, you may deduct the value of such benefits from the damages to be awarded to the land on each side of the right of way." Then again, when the jury returned into court with the aforesaid verdict, defendant made no objection to the fact that it failed to state the amount of the benefit, if any, to the remaining land. The case of Ft. Lyons Canal Co. v. Farnan, 48 Colo. 414, 109 P. 861, 862, was an action in eminent domain, where the jury failed to find the benefit to the remaining land, and no objection was made thereto at the time the verdict was returned. The court there said: "Had counsel for petitioner, as it was his duty to do, at the time the verdict was returned and before the jury was discharged, if of opinion that the same was not sufficiently certain, made that objection, the verdict doubtless would have been forthwith corrected to show, with greater particularity if that were necessary, exactly what the jury did in fact pass upon and find. * * * Besides it may well be held that petitioner waived his right to question it, either as to form or substance, by failing to urge objection thereto in apt time." If the verdict is insufficient in not covering the issues submitted, the jury may again be sent out. Section 619, Code Civ. Proc. Had appellant desired to have the verdict of the jury specify the amount of the benefit, if any, to the land not taken by the construction of the road, he should have so informed the court at the time the verdict was returned; otherwise, he waived this requirement. Benson v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 777, 171 P. 948; Bloomberg v. Laventhal, 179 Cal. 616, 178 P. 496; Van Damme v. McGilvray Stone Co., 22 Cal. App. 191, 133 P. 995. He also waived it by his instruction No. 24 hereinbefore quoted. It is a fair presumption that following this instruction the jury, in assessing the damage to the land not taken, by reason of the severance, and in assessing the benefits accruing to the remaining land, found that the benefits equaled or exceeded the damage, and therefore could give appellant no damage for the severance.

From an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, we are of the opinion that the alleged errors of which complaint is made, did not result in a miscarriage of justice. Section 4½, art. 6, Const.

The judgment is affirmed.

WILKINSON v. LUND, County Treasurer et al.
(Civ. 3986.) *

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 25, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1930.

1. Counties $\S$ 190(2)—Limitation in county charter that state and county tax rate should not exceed certain amount included taxes mandatory under Constitution and statutes (Butte County Charter, art. 8, $\S$ 12).

Under Butte County Charter, art. 8, $\S$ 12 (St. 1917, p. 1803), providing that beginning with certain year state and county tax rate should be limited to \$2 per hundred of assessed valuation of property on assessment roll, except that in case of an emergency the board of supervisors by unanimous vote may exceed tax rate, limitation included all of mandatory rates under constitutional and statutory provisions.

2. Counties $\S$ 24—County may impose duties upon supervisors and other officers in addition to but not inconsistent with those prescribed by general laws (Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½).

Under Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½, providing that county may frame charter for own government consistent with and subject to Constitution and that charter shall supersede all laws inconsistent with charter relative to matters provided for in charter, county may by charter impose duties upon supervisors and other county officers in addition to rules prescribed by general laws but not inconsistent or in conflict therewith.

3. Counties $\S$ 24—Legislature's power to prescribe duties of county officers is not affected by constitutional provisions authorizing county to frame charters for own government (Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½).

Power of Legislature to enact general laws prescribing duties of officers of counties is not affected or impaired by Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½, authorizing counties to frame and adopt charters for their own government.

4. Counties $\S$ 1—"County" is governmental agency or political subdivision of state exercising some functions of state government.

A "county" is a governmental agency or political subdivision of state organized for purposes of exercising some functions of the state government.

5. Counties $\S$ 21½—Powers and functions of county government have direct and exclusive reference to general policy of state as branch of general administration thereof.

All functions and powers of county government organization have direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state and are in fact but branch of general administration of the policy.

6. Counties $\S$ 24—Legislature is without power directly by statute to relieve one county from obligation imposed on others and cannot do so by approving county charter limiting tax rate (Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½; Butte County Charter, art. 8, $\S$ 12).

State Legislature is without power directly by statute to relieve one county from obligations which it imposes on all others, and it cannot do so by approval of Butte County Charter, art. 8, $\S$ 12 (St. 1917, p. 1803), which would indirectly accomplish same thing by limiting amount of state and county tax rate, which would be in violation of Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½.

7. Statutes $\S$ 76(6)—Provision of county charter limiting state and county tax rate held invalid as taking control from general laws (Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½).

Under Const. art. 11, $\S$ 7½, providing that any county may frame charter for own government consistent with and subject to Constitution and that provision of charter relating to powers and duties of board of supervisors and all county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, provision of charter of county limiting county and state tax rate to \$2 per hundred of assessed valuation of property on assessment roll of county held invalid as taking control thereof from general laws.

Application by Guy Wilkinson for writ of mandate to be directed to Mattie Lund, as Treasurer and ex officio Tax Collector of the County of Butte, State of California, and others, to compel respondents to accept certain money as full payment of taxes of petitioner. Application denied.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for petitioner.
George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate to compel the tax collector of Butte county to accept, in full payment of petitioner's taxes for the current fiscal year, a sum of money tendered by the petitioner and to issue an official receipt in full for such taxes. The sum so tendered is the amount of the petitioner's taxes, according to his contention, computed at the rate of "two dollars per hundred of the assessed valuation" of his property. The rate fixed by the board of supervisors is \$3.15 on each \$100 of the assessed value. The county is operating under a charter adopted pursuant to the provisions of section 7½, article 11, of the Constitution. Article 8, $\S$ 12, of the charter reads as follows: "Beginning with the fiscal year 1919-1920, the State and County tax rate for the County of Butte shall be limited to Two Dollars per hundred of the assessed valuation of the property on the assessment roll of the county, provided that in case of an emergency the Board of Supervisors, by unanimous vote, may exceed this tax rate. The term emergency, as used in this section shall be limited to an act of God, such as flood, fire or earthquake or of the public enemy, which necessitates the replacement of county property destroyed." (Stats. 1917, p. 1803.)

No part of the taxes in question was levied to meet an emergency. The resolution of the board of supervisors fixing the tax rate reads as follows:

"Whereas, the board of supervisors of the county of Butte, acting under the provisions of section 3714 of the Political Code of the state of California, has heretofore, to-wit: on August 30, 1929, adopted a budget for the expenditures of the county of Butte, state of California, for the fiscal year 1929-1930 and

"Whereas, it is necessary to fix the rates of county and district taxes necessary to raise the amount of the estimated expenditures as finally determined in said budget.

"Now, therefore, it is hereby resolved that the tax rate for Butte county for the fiscal year 1929-1930 be and is hereby fixed as follows:

County General Fund.....	$.75
Salary Fund	.30
Hospital Maintenance	.13
Junior College Tuition.....	.02
County Highway Maintenance.....	.18
General Reserve	.01
Budgeted Reserve	.09
Elementary Schools	.48
High Schools	.32
County Highway Bond Redemption.....	.32
County Highway Bond Interest.....	.11
Road	.40
Library	.04

Total County Rate..... $3.15"

It appears to be conceded, and necessarily so under various constitutional and statutory provisions, that the following rates, included in the foregoing total rate, are mandatory, the board of supervisors having no discretion as to the amounts to be raised for the purposes named:

Junior College Tuition.....	$.02
Elementary Schools	.48
High Schools	.32
County Highway Bond Redemption.....	.32
County Highway Bond Interest.....	.11
Total	$1.25

[1] Respondents contend that the tax limitation quoted is not applicable to these mandatory taxes, but only to such taxes as are discretionary with the board of supervisors. The limitation appears to be too plain and certain in its terms to admit of such interpretation. Josselyn v. City and County of San Francisco, 168 Cal. 436, 443, 143 P. 705. The term "county tax rate" clearly includes all of the mandatory rates mentioned.

Respondents' further contention, however, that the Constitution does not authorize the county so to limit its tax rate by its charter presents a more serious question. Section 7½ provides: "Any county may frame a charter for its own government consistent with and subject to the Constitution * * * and relating to matters authorized by provisions of the Constitution. * * * Such charter shall become the charter of such county and shall become the organic law thereof relative to the matters therein provided, * * * and shall supersede all laws inconsistent with such charter relative to the matters provided in such charter."

It requires no argument to show that only such provisions of a county charter as are authorized by the Constitution supersede state laws in conflict therewith and then only to the extent that such provisions are not limited by the Constitution. Such a limitation is found in subdivision 4 of section 7½ authorizing provisions in a county charter: "For the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers, for their removal and for the consolidation and segregation of county officers, and for the manner of filling all vacancies occurring therein; provided, that the provisions of such charters relating to the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

The limitation quoted is not modified or weakened by any other provision of section 7½. It is true that in subdivision 6 it is provided: "Whenever any county has framed and adopted a charter, and the same shall have been approved by the legislature, as herein provided, the general laws adopted by the legislature in pursuance of sections four and five of this article, shall, as to such county, be superseded by said charter as to matters for which, under this section it is competent to make provision in such charter, and for which provision is made therein, except as herein otherwise expressly provided."

[2, 3] Section 4, referred to in the language last quoted, provides that the Legislature shall establish a system of county governments and, by general laws, provide for township organizations. Section 5 directs the Legislature to provide for the election or appointment of boards of supervisors and other county officers and township officers and "prescribe their duties and fix their terms of office." If it were not for the limitation contained in subdivision 4 of section 7½ it might be argued with much force that the provisions of a county charter supersede "the general laws adopted by the legislature" prescribing the duties of supervisors and other county officers; but since that subdivision expressly provides that such provisions, in so far as they relate to the duties of supervisors and other county officers, "shall be subject to and controlled by general laws," such limitation must be construed to be one of the exceptions referred to in subdivision 6 as "otherwise expressly provided." When the various provisions of section 7½ are construed as indicated herein, they are in entire harmony. A county may by charter impose duties upon supervisors and other county officers in addition to those prescribed by general laws but not inconsistent or in conflict therewith. The power of the Legislature to enact general laws prescribing the duties of such officers is not affected or impaired by the constitutional provisions authorizing counties to frame and adopt charters for their own government. Esberg v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 110, 259 P. 730; Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 P. 302. "Whatever political autonomy a county may enjoy and whatever means it may employ in exercising self-government must be consistent with the grants and limitations of such powers prescribed by the organic law of the state." Shay v. Roth, 64 Cal. App. 314, 321, 221 P. 967, 970.

[4, 5] "A county is a governmental agency or political subdivision of the state, organized for purposes of exercising some functions of the state government." County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 631, 636, 63 P. 78, 80, 621; Reclamation District No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 679, 154 P. 845. "The authorities are quite uniform upon the proposition that all the powers and functions of a county government organization have a direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state, and are, in fact, but a branch of the general administration of that policy." Singh v. Superior Court, 44 Cal. App. 64, 66, 185 P. 985, 986. "All the people of the state, while not directly interested in the administration of the affairs of municipal corporations of which they are not members, are so interested in the administration of the governmental affairs of a county, whether they reside or own property therein or not, because, * * * such administration involves, * * * the administration of the affairs and policy of the state." County of Sacramento v. Chambers, 33 Cal. App. 142, 149, 164 P. 613, 616; Central Pac. Ry. Co. v. Costa, 84 Cal. App. 577, 586, 258 P. 991; Watson v. Greely, 67 Cal. App. 328, 337, 227 P. 664.

The state has expressly made it compulsory for a county to raise sufficient funds to maintain its public schools and pay its bonded indebtedness. All the people of the state are equally interested in the enforcement of law and order by every county, the administration of justice therein, the conduct of official business, the preservation of public health, the maintenance of hospitals, the support of the old and helpless, the care of dependent children, the protection of domestic animals against disease and of plant life against pests, the maintenance of highways and bridges, and the many other state functions which can be more efficiently exercised by the counties than by the state, but which the state may at any time "resume and directly exercise." 7 Cal. Jur. 389.

The state having delegated the exercise of these important functions to the several counties as state agencies, only the clearest language in the Constitution would warrant the conclusion that, by any of the terms thereof, it was intended to authorize a county, by its organic law, to defeat the purposes of the state by providing, directly or indirectly, that it will not exercise such functions. No one would attempt to uphold a provision in a county charter directly prohibiting the appropriation of public moneys for the preservation of the public health, for the maintenance of hospitals, the support of indigents, the care of dependent children, or for the performance of other duties imposed upon counties by the state. Looking at substance rather than form, it seems equally clear that it is beyond the power of a county indirectly to repudiate its obligation to discharge such duties by providing in its charter for such a limitation of its tax rate as to render the performance of those duties impossible. If Butte county may so limit its tax rate to $2, no reason appears why it may not limit it to $1.25, which would raise only sufficient money to maintain its public schools and make the payments falling due on its bonded indebtedness and would render the county incapable of performing the other functions imposed upon it by the state. That a county may not so incapacitate itself is recognized in Keyes v. City and County of San Francisco, 177 Cal. 313, 324, 173 P. 475, 479, cited by petitioner, wherein it is said: "It is argued by respondent that the limitation on the rate of taxation cannot apply to taxes used for what are normally county purposes because they are prescribed by the state and no discretion as to their performance by the city and county of San Francisco would be permitted; consequently, the dollar limit would apply only to taxation for municipal purposes, and it is not alleged that the tax rate for such purposes exceeds the limit. Granting that the city and county cannot by a limitation upon its tax rate disable itself from performing the functions properly imposed upon it by the state, it does not appear that the limit fixed in this instance is insufficient to enable such functions to be performed. The question of the due performance of county duties being eliminated, the abstract right to place a limit upon the rate of county taxation becomes unimportant." Granting that in order to raise a constitutional question a party must be interested and concerned in such question in a legal sense (5 Cal. Jur. 622), in this case it reasonably appears from an examination of the budget, showing the receipts and expenditures of the preceding fiscal year and the estimated receipts and expenditures for the current year, that the receipts from taxes at the maximum rate fixed by the charter, together with receipts from other sources, will be insufficient to enable the county to perform the functions imposed upon it by the state, and therefore the question here involved is not one of mere abstract right.

The limitation contained in subdivision 4 of section 7½ is clear and explicit. The fixing of the county tax rate is one of the duties of the board of supervisors. All inconsistency and confusion may be avoided by taking the constitutional limitation to mean exactly what it expressly provides, that the provisions of county charters "relating to the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

Josselyn v. San Francisco, 168 Cal. 436, 143 P. 705; San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 141 P. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 67; and other similar cases. The question considered in those cases was not the validity of the tax limit in the San Francisco charter, but the character of emergency which would justify a tax rate in excess of such limit. The decisions in those cases, therefore, throw little light upon the question involved herein.

[6] The approval of the Butte county charter by the Legislature has no bearing on the question of the validity of the tax limit therein. Since the Legislature is without power directly by statute to relieve one county from obligations which it imposes on all others, it logically follows that it cannot do so by approval of a county charter which would indirectly accomplish the same thing.

[7] For the reasons stated, it must be held that in matters of taxation, boards of supervisors are controlled by general laws, and that the provision of the charter of Butte county purporting to limit the tax rate therein is invalid.

The petition for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied, and the alternative writ is discharged.

PEOPLE v. SOTELO. (Cr. 1556.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1929.

1. Homicide §254—Evidence held to sustain conviction for second degree murder.

Evidence in prosecution for murder held sufficient to sustain conviction for murder in the second degree.

2. Criminal law §554—Jury was not compelled to believe defendant's uncontradicted testimony where circumstances reasonably justified inference of guilt.

Mere fact that testimony of defendant in murder prosecution was not improbable and was uncontradicted by direct testimony did not compel jury to believe it, where circumstances were such as to reasonably justify an inference of guilt.

3. Criminal law §1174(2)—Jurors consulting law books for definition held not prejudicial, where there was difference of opinion thereafter and request for further instruction.

Action of jurors in murder trial in consulting law books in order to ascertain meaning of term "malice aforethought" held not prejudicial, in view of fact that, after reading book, there was still a difference of opinion, and jury asked for and received further instruction upon the subject, particularly in view of fact that consulting of law books in and of itself by members of jury does not constitute error.

4. Criminal law §957(3)—Generally jurors cannot impeach verdict by affidavits showing misconduct, unless verdict is reached by resort to determination of chance.

Generally jurors are not permitted to impeach their own verdict by their affidavits showing misconduct on part of members, except where verdict is reached by resort to determination of chance.

5. Criminal law §1156(1)—Order denying new trial for misconduct will not be disturbed unless clearly an abuse of discretion.

Appellate court will not disturb an order denying a motion for a new trial on ground of misconduct, unless there is manifestly and clearly an unmistakable abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; H. G. Jorgensen, Judge.

Rufo Sotelo was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Murphy, of Salinas, and Ed. J. Clark, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Appellant was charged in an information filed by the district attorney of Monterey county with the crime of murder, for the killing of one Bartoleme Cabaltera. A verdict of murder in the second degree was returned by the jury. Motion for a new trial was made and denied. From the judgment entered upon the verdict and from the order denying a new trial appellant prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The main point relied upon for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. Defendant and the deceased, Filipinos, were employed in a camp in the vicinity of the town of Spreckels, Monterey county, Cal. Deceased was the cook at the camp, and defendant, so he testified, visited him for the purpose of collecting a certain sum of money which he claimed the deceased owed him. What transpired between them was testified to by defendant, who took the stand in his own behalf. In substance he claimed that, upon demanding payment of the sum due him, deceased became angry, denied the indebtedness, and commenced throwing stove wood at him, which struck him on certain parts of his head and body. After throwing the wood, deceased attempted to obtain possession of an iron poker with which to strike defendant, whereupon defendant, in order to protect himself, stepped toward the deceased and threw a knife at him which penetrated his back, producing a wound which shortly thereafter caused death. There were no eyewitnesses to the killing, and defendant claims that, as his testimony was not directly contradicted, the jury was bound to accept

It and should have acquitted him. There were other circumstances, however, from which the jury was fully justified in rendering the verdict which it did. It appeared in evidence that deceased ran from the kitchen with the knife in his back, calling for help, and that he was closely followed by the defendant. Defendant ran away from the scene of the killing, and, in the course of his flight, threw away a loaded revolver. He afterward concealed himself, but was subsequently arrested in an adjacent town. The knife with which the killing was done entered the back of the deceased between the third and fourth ribs for a depth of about six inches. It was the claim of the prosecution that it would have been impossible for the knife to have produced this character of a wound under the circumstances described by defendant, or that it could have penetrated the body of the deceased to the depth that it did. It was the theory of the prosecution that defendant had approached the deceased while he was bending over his stove and deliberately stabbed him. Defendant admitted that at the time the wound was inflicted the deceased had his back turned toward him. The nature and character of the wound and the fact that the knife remained imbedded in the back of the deceased, together with the other circumstances above related, were legitimate matters to be considered by the jury in reaching its conclusion. The mere fact that defendant's testimony was not improbable and was uncontradicted by direct testimony did not compel the jury to believe it, where the circumstances were such as to reasonably justify an inference of guilt. People v. Neary, 104 Cal. 373, 37 P. 943. As was said in People v. Hall, 87 Cal. App. 634, 262 P. 50, few criminals would ever be convicted if their explanations were always accepted as gospel truth.

[3-5] Appellant next complains of the giving and refusal to give certain instructions to the jury. These instructions relate to the question of flight by a defendant immediately after the commission of a crime, as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt, and also to the questions of self-defense and circumstantial evidence. We have read the instructions carefully. The jury was fully and fairly instructed upon these questions, and we find no error in this connection. And, finally, appellant complains of the action of the trial court in refusing to grant a new trial. When the motion came on for hearing, there was offered in evidence two affidavits of members of the jury which appellant claims show that the jury was guilty of misconduct during its deliberation. The misconduct relates to the fact that certain of the jurors consulted law books which were in the jury room to ascertain the meaning of the term "malice aforethought." After reading the same, there was still a difference of opinion among the jurors as to the meaning of the term, and the jury asked for and received further instruction upon the subject. Under these circumstances it is apparent that the defendant was not prejudiced by the action of the jurors. In and of itself, the consulting of law books by members of the jury has been repeatedly held not to constitute error. Durham v. State, 70 Ga. 264; People v. Draper, 28 Hun. (N. Y.) 1. Moreover, the general rule is that jurors are not permitted to impeach their own verdict by their affidavits showing misconduct on the part of its members, except where the verdict is reached by a resort to the determination of chance, and this is particularly so where the misconduct has been submitted to the trial court and passed upon by that tribunal, as the law is settled that the appellate court will not disturb an order denying a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct, unless there is manifestly and clearly an unmistakable abuse of discretion. People v. Maggio, 90 Cal. App. 683, 266 P. 813.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LINTON. (Cr. 1516.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 16, 1930.

1. Indictment and Information $\S$ 139—Denying motion to set aside information not made until after plea of not guilty held not error (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, 288a).

Where motion to set aside information was made after entry of plea of not guilty in prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, 288a, it came too late and denial thereof was not error.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 286—Allowing plea of insanity to be withdrawn to hear and determine motion to set aside information is discretionary with trial judge.

Though court has power to allow plea of insanity to be withdrawn for purpose of hearing and determining motion to set aside information accusing defendant of crime, exercise of that power necessarily is left to discretion of trial judge.

3. Indictment and Information $\S$ 139—Denying motion made after plea of not guilty to set aside information held not abuse of discretion, where two weeks elapsed between arraignment and entry of plea (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, 288a).

Where there was period of more than two weeks between date of arraignment of defendant for violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, 288a, and entry of plea within which defendant could have availed himself of motion to set aside information if he had so desired, court did not abuse discretion in denying motion made after entry of plea of not guilty.

4. Indictment and information $\Leftrightarrow$ 149—Denying permission to interpose demurrer after defendant pleaded not guilty as accused held not error (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Refusing to allow defendant, in prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, to interpose demurrer after entry of plea of not guilty, held not error.

Code, §§ 288, 288a, 996, and § 809, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1045; Const. art. I, § 8).

Where defendant, in prosecution for committing upon female child 10 years of age crimes defined by Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, did not file motion to set aside information until after entry of plea of not guilty, he was precluded by Pen. Code, § 996, from afterwards asserting objection by setting forth copy of commitment which was excluded in brief upon which he might have relied to show that information filed under Pen. Code, § 809, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1045, did not follow commitment and charged two offenses different from those of which defendant was charged in violation of Const. art. I, § 8.

6. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 624—Reading during trial on insanity issue information upon which defendant was convicted held not error (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Reading information to jury upon which defendant, in prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, was tried and found guilty during trial of issue of insanity, as pleaded by defendant, held not error, since purpose of insanity trial was to ascertain whether defendant had reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to particular acts he was charged with having committed by information.

7. Infants $\Leftrightarrow$ 20—Evidence in prosecution for committing lascivious crimes upon female child that defendant exhibited obscene pictures, corroborated by police officer's testimony as to obscenity, held admissible to show lewdness of purpose (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

In prosecution for commission upon female child 10 years of age crimes defined by Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, testimony by child that at time defendant exhibited certain pictures, which according to her description were obscene, and testimony by police officer that he found two such pictures among defendant's effects at time of arrest, held not error, since exhibition tended to show lewdness of purpose, and officer's testimony was corroborative of girl's assertion that appellant exhibited pictures.

8. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1178—Bare assignments of error unsupported by argument or citation of authorities cannot be considered (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Bare assignments of error, unsupported by argument or citation of authority on appeal of defendant from conviction for violation of Pen. Code §§ 288, 288a, for commission of lascivious crimes upon female child 10 years of age, may not be considered.

9. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 479—Appointment of physician to investigate sanity of accused pleading insanity, and permitting his opinion, held not violative of defendant's constitutional rights (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Appointment of physician, who was superintendent of state hospital, to investigate insanity of accused in prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, by committing lascivious crimes upon female child 10 years of age, and permitting physician to testify that in his opinion defendant was not insane, and that opinion was based upon personal examination and observation of defendant and also upon testimony given at trial by several witnesses as to defendant's actions and conduct, held not error or violating constitutional rights of defendant; testimony being competent, relevant, and material to issue then being tried.

10. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 605—Denying application for continuance made morning trial commenced held not error, where six weeks elapsed between entry of plea of insanity and trial (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a).

Denying application for continuance of prosecution for committing upon female child 10 years of age crime defined by Pen. Code, §§ 288, 288a, to procure testimony of defendant's sister to be used in trial as to his sanity, where defendant pleaded insanity, held not error, where application was not made until morning of commencement of trial, and period of six weeks elapsed between time of entry of plea and commencement of trial on issue.

11. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 452(2)—Opinions of witnesses not alienists, intimate friends, or acquaintances of accused, being tried on issue of insanity as to sanity, held inadmissible.

Opinions of witnesses who were not alienists, intimate friends, or acquaintances of accused, being tried for insanity, based upon observation of conduct of accused while he was in jail, held not admissible.

12. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1169(9)—Where court allowed witnesses not alienists, intimate friends, or acquaintances of accused, pleading insanity, to describe conduct of defendant, no error was committed.

Where witnesses who were not alienists, intimate friends, or acquaintances of accused, being tried on issue of insanity, were allowed to describe fully actions and conduct of accused, no error was committed, though opinions as to insanity of accused by those witnesses was admissible.

13. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 722 $\frac{1}{2}$ —District attorney's comments in trial on issue of defendant's insanity, upon acts information charged of which defendant was convicted held not error.

Comments by district attorney during trial of issue of insanity of defendant upon acts alleged in information, constituting crimes of which defendant had been convicted, held not error, since issue before jury was whether defendant had sufficient reasoning capacity to distinguish between right and wrong as to commission of acts charged.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Walter Linton was convicted of the violation of Penal Code, §§ 288 and 288a, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant was charged by an information containing two counts with having committed upon a female child 10 years of age the crimes defined by sections 288 and 288a of the Penal Code. When asked to plead to the charges he stood mute, and thereupon the court directed pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity to be entered in his behalf to both charges. Upon the first trial a jury found him guilty on both counts, and subsequently another jury declared him sane at the time of the commission of the acts charged. The appeal is taken from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, 24 points being urged as grounds for reversal. In considering these points they will be grouped according to the subjects to which they relate.

Appellant was arraigned on July 17, 1928, at which time he was represented by his present counsel, who requested that appellant be sent to the detention hospital for observation as to his sanity. Such an order was made, and the time to plead was continued to August 4, 1928. At that time the examining physicians declared him to be sane. He was then asked to plead to the charges, but, as stated, he stood mute, and the court caused the pleas above mentioned to be entered in his behalf; whereupon August 31, 1928, was set as the date for trial. On August 27, 1928, appellant asked leave to file a motion to set aside count two of the information upon the ground that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate, and twice in connection with said motion he sought to introduce in evidence the commitment of the magistrate holding him to answer. He asked also that he be allowed to interpose a demurrer, and at the opening of the trial he objected to the introduction of any evidence in substantiation of the second count upon the ground that the facts stated therein did not constitute a public offense. The trial court ruled adversely on all of the foregoing matters, and we find no error in its rulings.

[1-4] As said in People v. Magee, 60 Cal. App. 459, 213 P. 513, 514: "The motion [to set aside the information] having been made after entry of the plea of not guilty, came too late, and it was properly denied." True, the court has power to allow the plea to be withdrawn for the purpose of hearing and determining such a motion, but the exercise of that power necessarily is left to the discretion of the trial judge (People v. Ronsse, 26 Cal. App. 100, 146 P. 65); and in the present case it cannot be said that there was any abuse of such discretion, because there was a period of more than two weeks between the dates of the arraignment and the entry of the pleas within which appellant could have availed himself of such motion, if he had so desired. What has been said with reference to the motion to set aside the information applies with equal force to the ruling as to the demurrer, and conceding that a defendant may, at any time during trial, raise the objection that the facts stated in the information do not constitute a public offense (Pen. Code, § 1012), an examination of the information in the present case discloses that the objection made thereto, upon the ground stated, was without merit.

[5] Despite the two rulings of the trial court excluding the commitment from the record, appellant has set forth a copy thereof in full in his brief, and with respect thereto he contends that "the information filed under section 809, Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1045) did not follow the commitment and charged two offenses different from which the defendant had been held to answer, and in violation of article 1, § 8, of the state Constitution, and denied defendant due process and the equal protection of the law and violated the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution"; and incidentally he challenges the constitutionality of the code section above mentioned. Respondent argues that, since the commitment was definitely excluded from the record, appellant is precluded on appeal from raising any questions based thereon. In other words, it is contended that appellant is seeking to present for determination on appeal the points which he might have urged in the trial court, if his motion to set aside the information had been seasonably presented. We are of the opinion that respondent's position must be sustained, for, as declared in section 996 of the Penal Code, the failure to file a motion to set aside an information precludes the defendant from afterwards asserting the objections upon which he might have relied in furtherance of such a motion. It may be stated, however, that, owing to the nature of the crimes charged and the period of imprisonment prescribed as a punishment upon conviction thereof, we have inquired into said points, and in our opinion they would have been legally insufficient to justify the trial court in setting aside the information, even though a motion for such purpose had been seasonably presented.

During the trial upon the issue of appellant's guilt he sought to introduce evidence relating to his mental condition at the time the crimes were alleged to have been committed, claiming that section 1026 of the Penal Code excluding that character of evidence was unconstitutional. All of the points urged in support of such claim have been definitely disposed of adversely to his contentions in the case of People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767.

[6] At the trial on the issue of insanity the information upon which appellant was tried and found guilty was read to the jury, and appellant claims that this was error. Obviously, however, the very purpose of the insanity trial was to ascertain whether appellant had reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular acts he was charged with having committed (People v. Troche, supra), and manifestly the jury could not intelligently determine that question without being first informed as to the nature and character of such acts.

[7] The child testified that at the time the alleged criminal acts were committed upon her appellant exhibited certain pictures, which, according to her description of them, were obscene; and subsequently one of the arresting police officers testified that he found two such pictures among appellant's effects at the time of his arrest. The admission of the evidence was not error for the reason that the exhibition of the pictures tended to show a lewdness of purpose with which appellant accosted the girl, and the officer's testimony was corroborative of the girl's assertion that appellant had exhibited such pictures.

[8] In making the next three points (9, 10, and 11), appellant merely sets forth the bare assignments of error, unsupported by argument or citation of authority, and for that reason said points do not require special attention. All are without merit.

[9] Appellant claims that the court refused to appoint, at the state's expense, a physician to observe his mental condition and to testify as a witness in his behalf, and he contends that this was error. At the time this trial took place the law did not require the court to appoint alienists; nevertheless, the record herein shows that the court of its own motion appointed Dr. Leonard Stocking, medical superintendent of Agnews State Hospital for 20 years, to investigate the sanity of the accused; and afterwards Dr. Stocking testified that in his opinion appellant was sane, and that his opinion was based upon his personal examination and observation of the appellant, and also upon the testimony given at the trial by the several witnesses as to the appellant's actions and conduct. In our opinion the course taken by the court was not improper, and none of appellant's constitutional rights were violated thereby; furthermore, it is apparent that the testimony given by Dr. Stocking in this behalf was competent, relevant, and material to the issue then being tried.

[10] Contention is made also that the court erred in denying appellant's application for a continuance to procure the testimony of appellant's sister to be used upon the trial as to his sanity. But with reference thereto the record discloses that the application was not made until the morning of the commencement of the trial, and that a period of six weeks elapsed between the time of the entry of the plea and the commencement of the trial on said issue, which was ample to procure such testimony if appellant had so desired; moreover, the showing made in support of the application was wholly insufficient to warrant the court in granting the same.

[11, 12] Appellant produced certain witnesses who had observed his conduct and actions while he was in jail, and he sought to have these witnesses give their opinions as to his sanity. Admittedly the witnesses were not alienists, nor were they able to qualify as intimate friends and acquaintances; consequently, their opinions were not admissible. In conformity with the rule in such cases, however, the court allowed said witnesses to describe fully the actions and conduct of the appellant; consequently no error was committed.

[13] In his argument to the jury during the trial on the issue of insanity the district attorney commented upon the acts alleged in the information constituting the crimes of which appellant had been convicted, and such comment is assigned as error. As heretofore stated, the issue before that jury was whether appellant had sufficient reasoning capacity to distinguish between right and wrong as to these particular acts he was charged with having committed. Clearly, therefore, the district attorney had the right to comment upon the nature of such acts. The remaining points urged in appellant's brief either have been disposed of in connection with those already considered, or do not possess sufficient merit to require discussion.

After examining the entire record, including the evidence, it is our opinion that appellant has been fairly tried, that the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the verdicts rendered, and that such verdicts have not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

ANDREWS et al. v. DE LORM et al. *
(Civ. Div.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1930.

1. Sales $\S$ 479(7)—In conditional seller's action to recover automobile, evidence supported finding that car offered as down payment by buyer was never delivered to seller.

In action by seller in claim and delivery to recover possession of automobile sold under conditional sales contract, evidence held to support finding that automobile to be delivered to plaintiff as down payment was not delivered, where buyer, after being offered $450 for such car, was unable to deliver, and later recovered $180 from company which held it.

2. Evidence $\S$ 419(13)—Evidence of true consideration for conditional sales contract held admissible, notwithstanding recital therein acknowledging receipt of \$450 down payment.

Seller's recital, in conditional sales contract for automobile, acknowledging receipt of $450 as down payment, held not to preclude admission of evidence showing true consideration, and that stipulated down payment was not received; such evidence being admissible as showing why sellers deemed themselves insecure, in connection with breach of contract and as showing true consideration, parol evidence rule being inapplicable.

3. Sales $\S$ 479(2)—Conditional seller of automobile could retake car, regardless of default in payment, where buyer violated contract by removing car from state and selling it.

Seller of automobile under conditional sales contract held to have right to take car, regardless of any default in payment provided for in contract, where contract was violated in two other respects by removal from state and sale without permission, in view of provision that seller could terminate contract and retake possession, if purchaser failed to comply with any of terms, or seller should deem himself insecure.

4. Sales $\S$ 479(1)—Conditional seller held not limited to foreclosure of lien as remedy for buyer's breach of contract.

Remedy of seller of automobile under conditional sales contract was not limited to foreclosure of lien, on theory that contract was in effect chattel mortgage, in view of provision permitting seller to terminate contract and retake possession of property, if purchaser failed to comply with any of terms, or if seller deemed himself insecure.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1033(9)—In conditional seller's action in claim and delivery to recover automobile, finding value at less than only evidence showed held not prejudicial to defendants.

In action in claim and delivery, brought by conditional seller for possession of automobile, error, if any, in finding value of automobile in question was $600, held not prejudicial to defendants, where only evidence on such point placed value at $750 to $800.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; El. J. Marks, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery, by H. H. Andrews and another, doing business under the firm name and style of Andrews Motor Company, against R. H. De Lorm and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Gardiner, of Santa Ana, for appellants.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

BARNARD, J. This is an action in claim and delivery for the possession of an automobile, which was purchased by the defendant De Lorm from the plaintiffs, under a conditional sales contract entered into by the parties in Yakima county, Washington, on June 19, 1925. The automobile in question was delivered to De Lorm when the contract was signed. The contract provides for a purchase price of $1,164, acknowledges receipt of $450 down payment, and provides that the balance of $714 shall be payable, $400 on the 1st day of November, 1925, and $314 on the 1st day of March, 1926. The contract further provides that until the purchaser has fully complied with all of the terms thereof, and made all payments provided for therein, the title to said automobile shall remain in the seller; also, it provides that the purchaser agrees not to sell, attempt to sell, lease, mortgage, hypothecate or otherwise dispose of or incumber said personal property, nor take the same out of the county of Yakima, state of Washington, during the life of the contract. It further provides that the purchaser shall not assign this contract, or any of his rights thereunder, and that any such assignment shall, at the option of the seller, terminate all of the purchaser's rights under said contract, or the rights of any person holding or claiming the same.

The evidence shows that, at the time this agreement was entered into, the defendant De Lorm agreed to deliver to the plaintiffs a Ford automobile, which was to be accepted by them at the appraised value of $450, and the contract recited a first payment of $450, which represented the appraised value of this Ford automobile. At that time, the Ford car was in the possession of the Dobson Motor Company, having been placed there by the defendant De Lorm. De Lorm gave to plaintiffs an order upon the Dobson Motor Company for the Ford car, but stated he was going down that afternoon to get it. Nothing was said about the plaintiffs getting the Ford from the Dobson Motor Company. The Ford car was never delivered to the plaintiffs, but De Lorm employed an attorney and filed an action against the Dobson Motor Car Company, to recover his Ford or the value thereof. At this trial De Lorm testified that he was the owner of the Ford in question, and the trial resulted in his receiving $180 from the Dobson Motor Company. He had previously told the plaintiffs they would have to wait until this lawsuit was over to see whether he could get the car, or money with which to make the down payment. The $180 thus received by De Lorm was paid to plaintiffs upon the down payment. The plaintiffs requested him to execute a new contract, reciting the true facts and agreeing to make the payments easier, and upon a different basis; the new contract to include the balance of $270 on the first payment, and the remaining payments that were unpaid. De Lorm agreed to execute such a new contract, but failed to do so.

After the execution of the conditional sales contract, the plaintiffs sold and transferred the same to the General Credit Company. On December 18, 1925, the defendant De Lorm paid to the General Credit Company the $400 which was due November 1st. At that time De Lorm told the General Credit Company that he would like to take the car to California, and there refinance the deal. He was told by them that he would not be allowed to take the car from the state until it was fully paid for. Shortly thereafter, without the consent of the plaintiffs, or the General Credit Company, defendant De Lorm took the automobile in question from the state of Washington to the state of California, and a little later sold the car to the defendant Mendenhall, receiving a Buick car for his equity therein. In January, 1926, defendant Mendenhall wired the General Credit Company, inquiring as to the amount due on the contract, and stating that, if the balance due was $314, he would mail a check for the amount. About that time the General Credit Company reassigned the contract to the plaintiffs and advised defendant Mendenhall of this action. The plaintiffs wired defendant Mendenhall that the amount due on the car was $580, plus interest on $270, being the balance they claimed to be due on the first payment, from the preceding June. On January 21, 1926, the attorney for defendants wrote plaintiffs that the defendants had advised him they were ready to pay the sum of $314. At the trial of the action, defendants tendered to plaintiffs the sum of $314 in cash. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, the defendants have appealed.

[1] Appellants present the questions they raise under three general heads, but one of them really determines the issues presented. This is as to whether or not the court erred in finding that the $450 down payment on the purchase price of said automobile was not made at the time the conditional sales contract was entered into by the parties thereto, and whether the court erred in finding that the Ford car was not delivered to the plaintiffs, as agreed between the parties. Appellants introduced evidence to the effect that, at the time the contract was entered into, it was agreed that plaintiffs should get the Ford car from the Dobson Motor Company, and that their salesman said to defendant De Lorm, "Now, so far as you are concerned with this deal, you are through; we will get the Ford coupé." However there was ample evidence of the state of facts as heretofore set forth. Plaintiffs' salesman, who sold the car to defendant De Lorm, testified that De Lorm said he was going down that afternoon to get the Ford car, and that nothing was said at that time, or any other time, about the plaintiffs getting the car; also, the defendant De Lorm later told them they would have to await the result of the lawsuit, to see if he recovered the car, or whether he could get money to make a down payment. An attorney at law, who prosecuted the action to recover the Ford car from the Dobson Motor Company, testified that he instituted the action at the request of defendant De Lorm, and that he was not employed by the plaintiffs. It is also in evidence that defendant De Lorm testified in that action that he was the owner of the Ford in question, and at the conclusion of the action he received $180 therefrom, which he paid to the plaintiffs upon the down payment on the car involved in this action. Not only was there a conflict in the evidence, but the preponderance thereof appears to be in favor of the plaintiffs.

[2] Appellants insist that respondents were bound by the recital in the conditional sales contract, acknowledging receipt of the $450 as a down payment, and that the evidence as to the transaction in connection with the Ford car was not admissible, for the reason that it was the purpose of this evidence to vary the terms of a written contract by oral evidence. Appellants cite a number of authorities in support of this contention, which, however, are not in point. Not only was this evidence admissible, as showing a reason why respondents deemed themselves insecure, in connection with the breach of the contract in removing the automobile from the state, and in selling the same, but the evidence was also admissible to show the true consideration of the contract.

"Parol evidence is admissible to show that the true consideration of a contract was not that which the contract recites; that it was something different, either a different valuable consideration, or a good consideration such as love and affection, instead of the valuable consideration recited. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2." Winchester v. Winchester, 175 Cal. 391, at page 393, 165 P. 965, 966. See, also, Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 166 P. 808.

"That the law in California permits parol proof to show the want of consideration in written executory contracts is beyond question. This follows from a consideration of sections 1614 and 1615 of the Civil Code, and section 1962, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Moreover, it has been so decisively held by the courts of this state. In Stanton v. Weldy, 19 Cal. App. 374, 126 P. 175, the court points out that the rule is the same whether the named consideration be money or any other article of personal property. Therein it is said: 'On principle, we can discover no reason for allowing proof of no consideration where money is the consideration named and denying it where some article of personal property is named as the consideration. If the promisor received nothing in either case, he may show the fact in defense.' " Braselton v. Vokal, 53 Cal. App. 582, at 584, 200 P. 670, 671.

"But the rule is that the parties are not estopped by recitals in an agreement with respect to its consideration. The true consideration, or the want of consideration, may always be shown by extrinsic evidence for the purpose of impeaching a contract, notwithstanding that it states facts which show a valuable consideration [citing cases]." Royer v. Kelly, 174 Cal. 70, at page 72, 161 P. 1148, 1149.

"* * * It has always been held that the amount or kind of consideration recited in a deed is open to contradiction or explanation. White v. Schader, 185 Cal. 606, 198 P. 19, 21 A. L. R. 499; 10 R. C. L. p. 1042, § 236. The same rule applies to the instrument setting forth the preliminary contract. The amount or kind of consideration is not considered an essential part of a contract and is open to contradiction or explanation like a common receipt." Robson v. O'Toole, 60 Cal. App. 710, at page 716, 214 P. 278, 280.

It is apparent that in this case plaintiffs did not get the first payment agreed upon, and if the evidence introduced by the plaintiff is to be believed, as it was believed by the trial court, the defendants were taking advantage of what was nothing more than a receipt in the contract, to avoid paying the full purchase price agreed upon. Oral testimony was admissible to show what was actually received by the plaintiffs upon the purchase price named in the contract. Under the evidence there was a partial failure of consideration, and the true amount paid was properly shown by parol. It was proper to show what was the true consideration, so far as the first payment is concerned, and that the same was not delivered, or its equivalent paid.

[3, 4] The contract in question was also violated in two other respects, the evidence showing that the defendant De Lorm, without permission, removed the automobile from the state of Washington to the state of California, and thereafter sold the same, or his interest therein. At that time the car had not been paid for. The contract between the parties provided that in the event the purchaser failed to comply with any of the terms thereof, or in the event the seller should at any time deem himself insecure, he should have the right, without notice, to terminate the contract and retake possession of the property, wherever the same might be found, and that all money theretofore paid should be retained by the seller as and for the use of the property, and as liquidated damages for the nonfulfillment of the contract. Under the circumstances, plaintiffs were justified in feeling themselves insecure. They therefore had the right to retake the car regardless of any default in any payments provided for in the contract. Bice v. Harold L. Arnold, Incorporated, 75 Cal. App. 629, 243 P. 468. In this connection, appellants argue that the contract involved here is, in effect, a chattel mortgage, and that the only remedy of plaintiffs was to foreclose their lien. This contention is without merit. Bice v. Harold L. Arnold, Incorporated, supra.

[5] It is further argued that the court erred in finding that the value of the automobile in question, at the time respondents demanded the return of the same from appellants, was $600. The only evidence appearing in the record on this point places this value at from $750 to $800. No prejudice to the appellants is here shown. This was a claim and delivery action, asking for the return of the property, or the value thereof, in case the property could not be returned. In this case the automobile itself was actually returned. If it had not been returned, plaintiffs would then have had a judgment against them for $600, instead of for $750 or $800. The error, if any, being in their favor, would in any event not justify a reversal (Moore v. Borgfeldt [Cal. App.] 273 P. 1114), but, under the circumstances shown in the record, is immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇨347(1)—Clerk's attempt to cancel judgment entered was without effect as respected filing notice of appeal within statutory limits (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Action of clerk in charge of judgments in attempting to cancel first entry of judgment was without effect, as respected filing notice of appeal within statutory limits set by Code Civ. 3. Appeal and error ⇨356—Appeal initiated after prescribed period after entry of judgment confers no jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction of Supreme Court to entertain appeals is dependent on a compliance with statutory prerequisites in relation thereto, and an appeal initiated after prescribed period after entry of judgment has lapsed confers no jurisdiction on Supreme Court.

PRESTON, J. All appeals in this action not heretofore dismissed upon stipulation are now hereby dismissed. Enumeration of a long list of names is unnecessary. The basis of this conclusion is that the notices of appeal were not filed within the statutory limit set by section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment was entered September 6, 1928. The notices were filed on and subsequent to February 6, 1929. The time for filing notices of appeal expired November 5, 1928. Proceedings on motion for a new trial were not initiated prior to the last-mentioned date. Manifestly, without some additional showing, the notices came too late.

But it is said that the judgment was entered September 12, 1928; that notices of intention to move for a new trial were filed on November 10, 1928, and were heard and denied February 26, 1929; hence it is claimed the notices of appeal above referred to were in time. It appears, however, that on August 31, 1928, findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, as was also the judgment, and this fact was noted in the register of actions kept by the clerk. On the 6th day of September, 1928, the clerk spread the said judgment at length upon the judgment book, and also noted this fact in his register of actions. However, the clerk in charge of judgments, intending to have the date of making up of the judgment roll and docket entries correspond with the date of entry of judgment, essayed on his own account, without order of court, to re-enter the identical judgment in the judgment book on September 12, 1928. He then undertook to cancel his first entry of the judgment by writing across the face thereof these words, "Canceled, September 12, 1928," and making a marginal note thereon, reading as follows: "This judgment after being entered, was returned to court before docketing, and is now entered under date of September 12, 1928, in Book 689, Page 391. [Signed] A. R. Groenke, Chief Judgment Clerk pro tem. September 12, 1928."

On February 26, 1929, a motion was duly noticed, having for its object the correction of the records of the action to speak the truth, by expunging therefrom the purported entry of September 12th, and also expunging the attempted cancellation, as well as the marginal and other matter purporting to nullify the previous entry of the judgment on September 6th. The application was supported by affidavits, and a hearing was had thereon, and thereafter, on March 20, 1929, the court made an order in full accord with the notice, the effect of which was to remove all clouds from around and about said entry of September 6th, and to declare it to be the true date of entry of said judgment.

[1] We see nothing whatsoever upon which to question the propriety of this action of the trial court. Manifestly the judgment was entered September 6th, and manifestly, also, the clerk may not alter the effect of the entry by any act of his own solely in pursuance of his ministerial authority. The loss or destruction of the judgment book would not alter the effect of the entry of judgment nor the constructive notice which it imparts. 23 R. C. L. p. 268.

Counsel on both sides have spent much time and energy in presenting us with voluminous briefs, but to us the question is determined by the statute and by well-settled decisions of this court. It may be conceded that, if we could say that the action of the court in making the order expunging the purported entry of September 12th was void, we would, in aid of our own jurisdiction, so declare, thereby sustaining these appeals; but certainly the burden rests upon appellants to show wherein such order was invalid, and no such showing is made or attempted. These motions are presented and resisted upon certificates and first and second supplemental certificates made by the clerk of the court. From them it is our conclusion, as above stated, that the court acted properly within its powers, and nothing is shown to in any wise make even questionable its action.

The duty of the clerk to enter the judgment in conformity with the decision of the court is declared in section 664 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The duty to keep a judgment book and enter therein the judgments rendered is declared in section 668 of said Code. The duty to make up and file the judgment roll is declared in section 670 of said Code. This is to be followed by proper entries in the docket to be kept by said clerk. Section 671, Code Civ. Proc. The register of actions and its notations are provided for in section 1052 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] To be effectual the judgment must be entered. Code Civ. Proc. § 664; Schurtz v. Romer and Kerkow, 81 Cal. 244, 247, 22 P. 657. This is the initial point from which rights thereunder respecting appeals arise. Coon v. United Order of Honor, 76 Cal. 354, 355, 18 P. 384; Menzies v. Watson, 105 Cal. 109, 38 P. 641; Estate of Scott, 124 Cal. 671, 675, 57 P. 654; Dore v. Klumpke, 140 Cal. 356, 73 P. 1064; Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Missouri, etc., Ry. Co., 152 Cal. 344, 92 P. 868.

[3, 4] Our jurisdiction to entertain appeals is dependent upon a compliance with the statutory prerequisites. Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 326, 156 P. 486; Estate of Turner, 139 Cal. 85, 72 P. 718; Williams v. Long, 130 Cal. 58, 62 P. 264, 80 Am. St. Rep. 68. Section 939 has been liberalized to allow an appeal after rendition and before entry, but an appeal initiated after the prescribed period after entry has lapsed confers no jurisdiction on this court. The clerk exercises no judicial function, and his errors do not extend jurisdiction by indirection or estoppel.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. It is a conceded fact in this case that, at the time the appeal was taken, the clerk's record showed that the judgment was entered on September 12, 1928. The notice of appeal should therefore be held to have been filed in time. When the proceedings on motion for a new trial were commenced, to wit, on November 10, 1928, and on February 6, 1929, when the notice of appeal was filed, the register of actions contained the following entry: "1928, Sept. 12. Judgment entered, docketed and roll filed. Judgment Book 689, page 391." It is not disputed that the judgment was copied at length in Judgment Book 689, at page 391, in the form required by law. The motion of the respondents to cause the records to show that the judgment was entered on September 6, 1928, was noticed for March 4, 1929, and was granted on March 20, 1929, which was long after the time for taking the appeal had expired. In other words, from September 12, 1928, until March 20, 1929, the records of the superior court in this action showed that the judgment was entered on September 12, 1928. Until this record was amended, it imported absolute verity. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Bernhard v. Wall, 184 Cal. 612, 621, 194 P. 1020.

The official duties of the clerk in keeping the judgment book and the register of actions are prescribed by sections 668 and 1052 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The presumption of regularity in the performance of those duties attached under subdivision 15 of section 1963 of the same Code. This presumption and the face of the records of the clerk of the court are of paramount importance to lawyers and litigants, for they provide the test of jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal, and the correctness of the record may not be disputed collaterally. City of Los Angeles v. Glassell, 203 Cal. 44, 49, 262 P. 1084. The lawyer, the litigant, and the reviewing court are bound by such a record, until it is modified, or amended, or impeached. The practitioner at the bar ought to be permitted to rely absolutely on such a record.

It may not be disputed that the trial court had the power to entertain and pass upon the respondents' motion to correct the record, but its order in the premises was necessarily without prejudice to the rights of these appellants, who had relied on the correctness of the record in the meantime. The order of the trial court was effective, either from and after its date of March 20, 1929, when it was made, in which event it did not disturb the rights of the parties already accrued under the statute, or it was in substance a nunc pro tunc order, effective as of September 6, 1928. If the latter, it falls within the unvarying rule in this state that one of the functions of a nunc pro tunc order is to preserve substantial rights, and is never used to impair the rights of litigants. Osmont v. All Persons, etc., 165 Cal. 587, 592, 133 P. 480, and cases therein cited.

The question to be decided on this motion to dismiss is one determining the appellate jurisdiction of this court. Its solution depends on the facts presented. The trial court could not, by the entry of the order correcting the records, deprive this court of its power on the present motion to determine its own appellate jurisdiction. If no such order had been entered, and the motion to dismiss the appeal herein had been made, on the ground that the judgment had actually been entered on September 6th, and therefore the appeal was too late, and the same showing were attempted to be made in this court as was made in the trial court on the motion to correct the record, I hesitate to believe that this court would do the appellants the injustice of dismissing their appeals, when they had relied, in taking their appeals, on the unimpeached record of the clerk of the superior court. Rather would it be held, I apprehend, that, in the face of the unimpeached record, showing the entry of the judgment on September 12, the motion to dismiss would be in the nature of a collateral attack upon the record of the trial court, and would necessarily have to be denied.

Furthermore, the right of appeal in this case is conferred by the Constitution and statutes, and rules of procedure for its exercise are strictly construed in favor of the party desiring the review. Estate of Nelson, 128 Cal. 242, 245, 60 P. 772; Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) vol. 2, § 545. The opinion of the majority construes the record strictly against the right of appeal, and in my opinion does an injustice to litigants who have diligently and in good faith endeavored to present their cause to this court. Lawyers and litigants are indeed in a precarious position, if they may not, in determining when to file notice of appeal, rely on the prima facie correct and unimpeached record of the clerk of the superior court, setting forth the date of the entry of a judgment.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Husband and wife ⇨267(1)—Husband could sell community property prior to 1913 without wife's consent (Civ. Code, § 172, prior to 1917 amendment).

Where community property was deeded to husband in 1907, its status was fixed by Civ. Code, § 172, prior to 1917 amendment, which gave husband the right to sell without his wife's consent, and the amendment did not change the vesting of the property or give the wife any greater rights than she previously possessed.

2. Husband and wife ⇨262(1)—Presumption that property acquired after marriage is community property is rebuttable.

Presumption that real property acquired after marriage is community property is a rebuttable presumption, which either party claiming to the contrary may controvert and offer evidence to overcome.

3. Husband and wife ⇨264—Presumption that property acquired after marriage is community property will support finding when controverting evidence does not convince court.

While only such evidence as under all the circumstances would ordinarily produce conviction in an unprejudiced mind is needed to overcome presumption that property acquired after marriage is community property, the presumption will support a finding in accordance therewith, when evidence to overcome it does not convince the court.

4. Records ⇨18(10)—Decree under McEnerney Act is conclusive on those claiming equitable interests (McEnerney Act, §§ 1, 11).

Decree under the McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78), providing for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss or destruction of public records, in view of sections 1 and 11, is binding on one claiming to own an equitable interest as well as those claiming under the legal title.

5. Records ⇨18(10)—Decree under McEnerney Act in favor of husband was conclusive against equitable claims of wife when its validity was not attacked (McEnerney Act).

Decree declaring and establishing husband's title to real property under the McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78), was conclusive as against wife's claim that property was bought with her separate money and that husband was trustee, notwithstanding confidential relationship, where validity of the decree was not attacked for fraud or mistake.

6. Husband and wife ⇨265—Wife is entitled at any time to institute action to have husband declared trustee of her separate property held in trust for her by him.

Wife is entitled at any time to institute action against her husband to have him declared trustee of her separate property held in trust for her by him, though she is not entitled during his life to have her interest in the community property ascertained and declared.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by David Ososke against Otto Kalinowsky and wife for specific performance of agreement for sale of real estate. From a judgment and decree in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Marion Veckl, of San Francisco, for appellants.

I. Karmel, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Henry E. Monroe, of San Francisco, amicus curiae.

CURTIS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and decree in favor of the plaintiff for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a certain lot in San Francisco. There is no dispute with regard to the facts of the agreement. On May 3, 1924, Otto Kalinowsky entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to sell a certain lot situate on Augusta street in the city of San Francisco for the sum of $500. He received from the plaintiff the sum of $25 on account, and gave him a receipt therefor. The body of the receipt was entirely in the handwriting of the plaintiff, who testified that he had copied it from a blank form used by real estate brokers. Said receipt reads as follows:

"San Francisco, Calif., May 3, 1924.

"Received from David Ososke the sum of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars, being deposit on account of five hundred dollars ($500.00) U. S. gold coin, the purchase price of the property this day sold to David Ososke and subject to the owners' approval, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and described as follows, to-wit:

"All that certain lot property commencing at a point on the south side of Augusta Street fifty feet west of Boutwell St. thence seventy-five feet south, thence twenty-five feet west, thence seventy-five feet north, thence twenty-five feet east to point of commencement.

"Title to be perfect, McEnerney decree required. Sixty days time required to search title.

[Signed] Otto Kalinowsky.

"David Ososke."

This contract and agreement was on May 9, 1924, duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco.

It will be noted that this receipt was not signed by Bertha Kalinowsky, the wife of Otto Kalinowsky. She refused to sign a conveyance of said property to the plaintiff upon the ground that said property was her separate property, having been purchased with funds acquired by her prior to her marriage, and that, inasmuch as her husband, Otto Kalinowsky, had not been given authority by her to arrange for the sale of said property, the contract entered into between him and the plaintiff was not binding upon her.

The plaintiff tendered to the defendants the balance of the purchase price, and upon their refusal to accept same commenced this action for specific performance. No issue was made in the lower court as to the legality of the contract or the adequacy of the consideration. The sole issue there presented was whether the property was or was not, at the time of the making of the contract of sale, the separate property of the defendant Bertha Kalinowsky.

The finding of fact with reference to the ownership of the property is as follows: "It is not true that Bertha Kalinowsky, the wife of defendant Otto Kalinowsky, is or at any time was the owner of said property, except as to her community interest therein." And the conclusion of law based thereon is as follows: "That at all of the times herein and more particularly on and after April 7, 1908, the defendant Otto Kalinowsky was the owner of the property referred to in said complaint holding the same as the community property of himself and his wife, Bertha Kalinowsky."

It was an admitted fact in the court below that defendants Otto Kalinowsky and Bertha Kalinowsky were husband and wife on December 14, 1907, the date upon which the real property in suit was conveyed from B. Paige & Co., a corporation, to the defendant Otto Kalinowsky. This deed was duly recorded on December 19, 1907. It is also an admitted fact in the case that, after the acquisition of the property, Otto Kalinowsky instituted an action in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, under the act popularly known as the "McEnerney Act" (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78), and secured a decree, made and entered on April 7, 1908, declaring and establishing the title to the said property to be in him, the plaintiff therein. In said decree it was adjudged that he was the owner in fee simple, and that no other person had any right, title, or interest therein, either legal or equitable. The validity of this judgment was not questioned by the defendants in the court below. There can be no question, therefore, but that, at the time of the making of the agreement and the recordation thereof, the legal title to said property was in Otto Kalinowsky.

Subsequent to the recordation of the said contract of sale, on October 6, 1924, Otto Kalinowsky conveyed the said property to his wife, Bertha Kalinowsky. This conveyance being subsequent to the making of the contract of sale, is, of course, wholly immaterial to a determination of the question of the ownership of the property at the time of the making of the agreement.

[1] According to the record, this property was acquired by Otto Kalinowsky by deed from B. Paige & Co. on December 14, 1907. Section 172 of the Civil Code, prior to the 1917 amendment, gave to the husband the absolute management and control of the community real property with the right of sale without the wife's consent. The status of the property was fixed by the law as it existed at the time of its acquisition (Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 57 Am. St. Rep. 170) and the amendment did not change the vesting nor give to the wife any greater right in the property than she possessed therein prior to the amendment (Roberts v. Wehmeyer, 191 Cal. 601, 218 P. 22). If, therefore, as found by the trial court, this property was the community property of the defendants, the husband, Otto Kalinowsky, could make a valid contract for the sale, the wife's consent was not necessary, and the contract was binding upon both of them.

The only evidence introduced by the plaintiff relative to the status of the property was the judgment roll in the "McEnerney" suit entitled "Otto Kalinowsky v. All Persons." Plaintiff did, however, introduce additional evidence to the effect that the contract was a just and equitable one, and that the sum of $500 was a fair price to pay for the lot. This latter evidence was not contradicted by the defendants. They confined their evidence to the status of the property, and each of them testified, in support of their claim, that the property was the separate property of Bertha Kalinowsky; that the property had been purchased with funds acquired by the defendant Bertha Kalinowsky prior to her marriage to Otto Kalinowsky. Bertha Kalinowsky testified that the money was money which she had brought from Germany, together with money which she had earned before her marriage. Her testimony was corroborated to some slight extent by the testimony of a witness who testified that she had known Mrs. Kalinowsky before Mrs. Kalinowsky's marriage, and that Mrs. Kalinowsky "worked hard and she brought some money from Germany with her." The defendants also relied upon the phrase "subject to the owners' approval," incorporated in the written receipt, as substantiating their claim that the plaintiff was aware at the time he entered into the agreement that the property belonged to some person other than Otto Kalinowsky. However, the explanation given by the plaintiff that he copied a blank form used by real estate brokers in making up the receipt is plausible, and was evidently accepted as true by the trial court.

The judgment being in favor of the plaintiff, based upon its finding that the property

In controversy was the community property of the defendants, the sole question presented upon this appeal is whether or not there is sufficient evidence in the record to support this finding. Plaintiff contends in support of the judgment that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence as to whether said property was the community property of the defendant. He also relies upon the conclusive effect of the "McEnerney" judgment as an adjudication of the ownership of the property embraced in its decree. It is appellants' position, however, that the "McEnerney" decree did not adjudicate the rights of Bertha Kalinowsky; that the judgment in that action that Otto Kalinowsky was the owner in fee and that no person had any right, title, or interest therein, either legal or equitable, was consistent with their theory that Otto Kalinowsky was holding the title in trust for his wife; that, this being so, as the respondent offered no evidence which contradicted, or tended to contradict, their testimony, the presumption that the property was community property, title thereto having been acquired in the name of the husband during coverture, disappeared from the case, and it thereupon became the duty of the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the appellants.

[2, 3] Ignoring the "McEnerney" decree, they take the position that the judgment of the trial court was based solely upon the disputable presumption that the property, having been acquired after their marriage, was community property, and they therefore concentrate their efforts upon attempting to prove that this presumption was entirely disproved by their testimony. It is, of course, true that this presumption is a rebuttable presumption which either party, claiming to the contrary, may controvert and offer evidence to overcome. Van Camp v. Van Camp, 53 Cal. App. 17, 24, 199 P. 885; Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 394, 73 P. 172, 173; Estate of Warner, 167 Cal. 686, 688, 140 P. 583. It is also true, as appellants contend, that to disperse this presumption it was not necessary for them to produce conclusive evidence to the contrary, but only such evidence as under all the circumstances of the case would ordinarily produce conviction in an unprejudiced mind that the property was the separate property of one of the spouses. They rely particularly upon Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., supra, in support of this position. We are in accord with the rule as stated in Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., supra, which is therein stated as follows: "While the presumption attending the possession of property by either husband or wife is that it is community property, such presumption is a disputable one, and may be controverted by other evidence. * * * Certainly it is not required that the proof to destroy this presumption should be any more than sufficient to satisfy the mind of court or jury that its weight is enough to cause a reasonable person, under all the circumstances, to believe in its sufficiency, in order to counterbalance the naked presumption that the property was acquired with the funds of the community. * * * Clearly, it was never intended by this court to lay down a rule requiring demonstration in such matters; that is, such a degree of proof as excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty. * * * Such proof is never required. Generally, moral certainty only is required, or that decree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind; and evidence which ordinarily produces such conviction is satisfactory. * * * We are of the opinion that it is incumbent on the party seeking to overcome the presumption of community property to do no more than to produce such legal evidence, as, under all the circumstances of the particular case, would ordinarily produce conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and that in the face of such evidence the naked presumption, unsupported by any testimony, must fall." While the rule thus enunciated supports the contention of appellants that conclusive proof is not necessary to overcome the presumption of community property, the case itself does not go to the full extent desired by appellants. It merely holds that, if there is evidence contrary to the presumption which would support a verdict of the jury in conformance with such evidence, the granting of a motion for a nonsuit is not proper. The case falls far short of holding that, if judgment had been rendered in conformance with the presumption, it would have been reversed upon appeal. In the case of Eaton v. Locey, 22 Cal. App. 762, 136 P. 534, cited by appellants, the court was convinced by the testimony of the plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor contrary to the presumption. Likewise, in Estate of Warner, 167 Cal. 686, 140 P. 583, the evidence therein, contrary to the presumption, compelled the conclusion by the lower court that the property in controversy was the separate property of the wife, and that conclusion was sustained by this court on appeal. We fail, however, to see how appellants can take much comfort in the above decisions. From the fact that judgment in the instant case was entered in favor of the plaintiff, it is obvious that the evidence offered on behalf of the appellants failed to produce conviction in the mind of the trial court.

In other words, the testimony of the appellants failed to convince the trial court that the property was in fact the separate property of the wife, and therefore failed to overcome the presumption that it was community property. The cases cited by appellants in which the testimony did convince the trial court have, therefore, no application here. Moreover, it has been held to be the rule of this court that the determination of the trial court upon conflicting evidence as to whether or not the evidence offered to overcome the presumption of community property is clear and convincing is not open to review on appeal. Estate of Nickson, 187 Cal. 603, 203 P. 106.

It is quite evident, therefore, that the trial court could have based its finding that the property was community property solely upon this disputable presumption. The particular phrasing of the conclusion of law, above referred to, "that at all of the time herein and more particularly on and after April 7, 1908" (the date of the "McEnerney" decree), "the defendant Otto Kalinowsky was the owner of the property referred to in said complaint holding the same as the community property of himself and his wife, Bertha Kalinowsky," might indicate, however, that the judgment was further predicated upon the "McEnerney decree."

Before discussing this act, however, it should be here noted that the "McEnerney decree" was brought into the case by the introduction of the judgment roll in evidence, and that no mention whatever was made of the "McEnerney decree" in the pleadings by either the plaintiff or the defendants. The amended complaint of the plaintiff presented an ordinary case for specific performance against Otto Kalinowsky, and alleged that "the defendant Bertha Kalinowsky and the fictitious defendants claim to have some interest in the land hereinabove described, but the interest they have, was acquired subsequent to the recordation of the said contract and with full knowledge of the same." The answer of the defendants denies that the defendant Otto Kalinowsky was at any of the times mentioned in the complaint, the owner of the land described, and further alleges that the interest of the defendant Bertha Kalinowsky is prior and superior to any claim of the plaintiff in said property.

[4] The so-called "McEnerney Act" is in chapter 59 of the extra session of 1906, approved June 16, 1906. St. 1907, Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 78. The purpose and history of this enactment is too well known to require repetition here. The act is entitled, "An act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of the loss or destruction of public records." Section 1 of the act provides that a party under the conditions referred to therein "may bring and maintain an action in rem against all the world, in the superior court for the county in which such real property is situate, to establish his title to such property and to determine all adverse claims thereto." The act also provides for the posting and publishing of summons and the filing of an affidavit by the plaintiff in said suit wherein the following facts must be fully and explicitly set forth: "(1) the character of his estate, right, title, interest or claim in, and possession of the property, during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained; (2) whether or not he has ever made any conveyance of the property, or any part thereof, or any interest therein, and if so when and to whom; also a statement of any and all subsisting mortgages, deeds of trust, and other liens thereon; (3) that he does not know and has never been informed of any other person who claims or who may claim, any interest in, or lien upon, the property or any part thereof, adversely to him, or, if he does know or has been informed of any such person, then the name and address of such person. If the plaintiff is unable to state any one or more of the matters herein required, he shall set forth and show, fully and explicitly, the reasons for such inability. Such affidavit shall constitute a part of the judgment roll." Section 11 of the act provides that: "The judgment shall ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description and shall be binding and conclusive upon every person who, at the time of the commencement of the action, had or claimed any estate, right, title, or interest in or to said property, or any part thereof, and upon every person claiming under him by title subsequent to the commencement of the action.

In view of the plain language of the statute that "the judgment shall ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property * * * whether the same be legal or equitable" and shall be binding "upon every person who, at the time of the commencement of the action, had or claimed any estate, right, title, or interest in or to said property, or any part thereof," we do not believe it can be correctly concluded that the rights of Bertha Kalinowsky were not adjudicated by said decree. The language of this particular section of the act is, in our opinion, so clear as to leave no room for interpretation or construction. Moreover, a consideration of the entire act leads to the conclusion that a suit brought under this act is in the nature of a suit to quiet title. Title, etc., Restoration Company v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 309, 88 P. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199. In fact, the title of the act expressly declares it to be "an act to provide for the * * * quieting of title to real property. * * *" This being so, a judgment obtained under this act is effective and binding upon the whole world in the same way that a judgment in a simple action to quiet title is binding upon a specific defendant. In Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, supra, in which case this act was for the first time before this court, an elaborate review of the act itself, the legal principles involved and the authorities was given. It was therein stated that the proceeding authorized by this statute was one quasi in rem, and declared that a decree under it was binding upon persons whose names were unknown, where the requirements of the statute had been fully complied with, notwithstanding the rule that ordinarily such judgment is only binding upon the parties and their privies. If the defendant Otto Kalinowsky had brought suit to quiet title against the defendant Bertha Kalinowsky, the decree obtained therein would have been binding upon her as to every claim, legal or equitable, which might have been litigated in that action. The "McEnerney Act" (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78) itself provides that all titles legal and equitable shall be "ascertained and determined," and that such determination shall be "binding and conclusive upon every person claiming any interest whatsoever." It follows, therefore, that the "McEnerney decree" not only establishes the legal title, but also determines upon what trusts, if any, the plaintiff in said action holds title, and that such determination is binding, not only upon those claiming under the legal title, but also upon any one claiming to own an equitable interest.

[5] The confidential relationship existing between husband and wife does not preclude a determination that the rights of the wife were ascertained and determined by said decree. An adverse claim is not necessarily one which is the basis of a present controversy. It is sufficient if it will form the basis of a future controversy. The act provides that the plaintiff in the suit in his affidavit shall explicitly set forth "that he does not know and has never been informed of any other person who claims or who may claim (italics ours) any interest in, or lien upon, the property or any part thereof, adversely to him. * * *" The fact that the personal relations of a husband and wife may be amicable, and that the wife is willing that her husband shall hold the legal title to her separate property, offers no certainty that at some future time the question of whether or not the husband is holding the property in trust for his wife may not be the subject of a legal controversy. In Title Insurance & Trust Company v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 111 P. 360, judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff in an action originally instituted by a wife against her husband to impress a trust upon certain property purchased with her separate money after marriage. It is apparent, therefore, that the interest of a wife in property, title to which is held by her husband, bought with her separate money after marriage, is an interest adverse to him.

[6] No analogy can be drawn between this interest of the wife in the property as her separate property held in trust for her by her husband and her interest in community property. As already stated, she is entitled at any time to institute an action against her husband to have him declared trustee of property held in trust by him. Title Insurance & Trust Company v. Ingersoll, supra. On the other hand, the wife is not entitled during the life of her husband to have her interest in the community property ascertained and declared. Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197.

We do not wish to be understood as holding that a confiding wife would be absolutely remediless if a "McEnerney" decree be obtained by her husband without her knowledge or without her interest having been set out in the affidavit which he is required by the act to file. In Bradley Company v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 131 P. 750, this court held that a judgment obtained by a trustee under the so-called "McEnerney Act," which on its face purported to establish and quiet the trustee's title to the trust property, did not divest the trustor of his interest therein where such judgment was permitted to be obtained as the result of a mutual mistake of law entertained by both parties as to the legal effect of such judgment. It is to be noted that this was a direct attack by an independent action to establish a trust where a decree had been obtained under the "McEnerney Act."

It is unnecessary for us to decide whether or not the wife would have been entitled to interpose as an equitable defense to the present action the falsity of the affidavit by which she was prevented from presenting her defense in the "McEnerney" suit. It is sufficient to say that she did not do so. We have already seen that she set up no such defense in her pleadings. As to the evidence, she offered no proof whatever that her name was omitted from the affidavit made by her husband in the "McEnerney" action through fraud or mistake or for any other cause. The husband was also a witness in the case, and he in no way explained, or attempted to explain, the reason for the omission of her name from said affidavit. In his said affidavit he stated, as the act required, that he knew of no person "who claims or who may claim" any interest in the property, or lien thereon adverse to him. There is no evidence in the record of the falsity of this statement. It therefore clearly appears that in her proof Mrs. Kalinowsky did not attack the validity of the "McEnerney" decree, but, upon the supposition that the decree was not binding upon her, completely ignored it, and relied solely upon the testimony that the property was purchased with her separate funds.

In the absence of some proof of the invalidity of the decree in the "McEnerney" suit, it is binding and conclusive upon the appellants herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

SHIENK and SEAWELL, JJ. We concur in the judgment and in the conclusions expressed in the prevailing opinion wherein it is held that the decree under the "McEnerney Act" is binding on the defendant wife.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. I think the judgment should be reversed, and base this conclusion upon the following course of reasoning:

Plaintiff sued defendants as husband and wife for specific performance of a contract signed by the husband alone, which, paraphrased, reads as follows: "San Francisco, Calif., May 3, 1924. Received from David Ososke the sum of $25.00 being deposit on account of $500.00 * * * the purchase price of the property this day sold to David Ososke and subject to the owners' approval, situated in the City and County of San Francisco * * * (description). Title to be perfect, McEnerney Decree required. Sixty days' time required to search title. (Signed) Otto Kalinowsky. David Ososke."

The complaint alleged title in fee-simple absolute and ability in defendant husband to transfer title at the time of execution of said contract. It further alleged that, subsequent to execution of said contract, which had been theretofore duly recorded, defendant husband attempted to convey said property by deed to defendant wife. Appropriate allegations are also found to the effect that the wife took with knowledge of and subject to said contract. Defendant wife, however, by answer denied the claim of plaintiff as to the ownership of and title to said property in her husband, alleging that said property was at the time of said contract and at all times mentioned owned by her as her separate property. She further alleged that her interest therein was prior to and superior to any claim of plaintiff thereto.

The court made findings of fact to the effect that defendant husband was the owner of the property at the time of execution of the contract, and that he held it as community property. It specifically found that on April 7, 1908, defendant husband, under a proceeding taken under the so-called McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Extra Session, p. 78, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 1026, p. 372), had procured a decree and judgment wherein it was declared that he (the said husband) was the owner of said property, and no other person had any right, title, claim, or interest therein adverse to him.

It is the contention of defendant wife that the testimony shows without contradiction that the property in question was purchased on December 14, 1907, with her separate funds, acquired by her prior to her marriage with her codefendant. The record fully sustains this contention, with no evidence to the contrary, except this decree and the presumption of law arising from the fact that title stood in the husband's name, which latter presumption is entirely removed by uncontradicted, credible testimony. In other words, it is clear that the court based its conclusion solely upon the said so-called McEnerney decree. The real question in the case, therefore, is: Does said decree foreclose defendant wife from setting up a parol trust in said property arising from the confidential relationship between herself and husband and the purchase of the property with her separate funds?

At the outset we take it as a self-evident proposition that, if the husband in this action were suing the wife to quiet title to the property in suit, he could not prevail over her contention, this because of said confidential relationship and the trust upon which he held the legal title. In Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 240, 131 P. 750, 751, involving a McEnerney decree, the court sets forth this principle in the following language:

"It is a matter of indifference under this pleading whether it be said that plaintiff is seeking to enforce a voluntary trust which has been repudiated by the trustee, or whether it is seeking to enforce an involuntary trust arising in law from that repudiation. In its creation the trust was voluntary, and, however at variance it may be thought to be with the mandate of the statute as to the creation of trusts in land, it is of such character that equity will not permit the trustee to take advantage of the confidential relations existing in which the trust itself originated and by repudiating the trust obtain an unconscionable advantage over the confiding trustor and beneficiary. So numerous are cases upon this subject that it must suffice to refer to Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 P. 506; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 P. 143; Kimball v. Tripp, 136 Cal. 631, 69 P. 428." See, also, Jasinski v. Stankowski, 145 Md. 58, 125 A. 684, 35 A. L. R. 275, and note, page 303; Webb v. Vercoe, 201 Cal. 754, 759, 258 P. 1099, 54 A. L. R. 1200.

Nor is it necessary to show fraud in the procurement of the decree. That a fraudulent use is about to be made thereof is sufficient upon which a court of equity may base its action. The court in Bradley Co. v. Bradley, supra, at pages 241, 242 of 165 Cal., 131 P. 752, said: "And finally upon this subject it may be added * * * that relief is not here sought against a judgment fraudulently obtained. The relief is sought against the fraudulent use of a judgment obtained under a thorough understanding between the parties and in furtherance of a trust relationship which existed between them. That such relief may be secured against the fraudulent use of a judgment not fraudulently obtained is well recognized in equity. Thompson v. Laughlin, 91 Cal. 313, 27 P. 752."

If the husband by virtue of the McEnerney decree could not successfully defend against the wife's equitable title to said property, neither can plaintiff in this action do so, for the plain reason that he is not under the showing here made in any better position for he is not an innocent purchaser for value. This statement finds abundant support in our authorities. Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 167, 3 P. 641, 644, lays down the fundamental doctrine as follows: "To entitle a party to protection, as such a purchaser, he must aver and prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the premises, the payment of the purchase money in good faith, and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment; for if he had notice, actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser." The case of Davis v. Ward, 109 Cal. 186, 41 P. 1010, 50 Am. St. Rep. 39, is an amplification of the same doctrine. See, also, Henry v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 135, at page 140, 124 P. 837, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 39, and Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 275, 162 P. 1020.

Of course, in the event of a decree in favor of the wife, plaintiff must be protected as to the item of $25 paid on account of the purchase price of said property. Davis v. Ward, supra; Henry v. Phillips, supra. See, also, a case similar in fact to the case at bar, Lindley v. Blumberg, 7 Cal. App. 140, 146, 93 P. 894.

It is also a fact that, even if the defendant husband had made a deed to plaintiff of the property and the purchase price remained unpaid, the wife could, in a separate suit, sue to establish her interest in said property, and, so long as the purchase price remained unpaid at the time of the institution of such suit by her, plaintiff would be without the protection afforded an innocent purchaser for value and the wife's claim would prevail. Henry v. Phillips, supra.

We then conclude that plaintiff is in no better position with respect to the transaction in question than the husband would be were he claiming the property as against the right of the wife.

Lastly, however, it is asserted that the pleadings are not in a form to permit the wife to set up her claim to the property, this because in her answer she at no time put in issue thereby, by allegations of fraud or mistake, the efficacy of said McEnerney decree. It will, however, be noted that the allegations of the complaint were general as to ownership in the husband, and betrayed no intention of relying upon said decree as a portion of the chain of title. This being true, defendant wife could not foreknow that plaintiff would so rely thereon. Under this state of facts, plaintiff having resorted to general allegations, defendant replied in kind with a general denial and with an allegation of title in herself and she should be allowed to meet any specific document offered in evidence by plaintiff in support of his claim with any legitimate defense known to the law. That this may be done has been in effect held several times in this state.

For example, in the case of Sparrow v. Rhoades, 76 Cal. 208, 18 P. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 197, an action of ejectment in which plaintiff claimed title under a deed from defendant, under a general denial and without a plea of confession and avoidance, evidence on behalf of defendant was held admissible to show that the consideration therefor was illegal and the deed therefore void.

In Holmes v. Salamanca, etc., Co., 5 Cal. App. 659, 91 P. 160, an action of ejectment for unpatented lode mining claims, the complaint, in the usual form, alleged plaintiffs' ownership, possession, and right of possession to said claims and their ouster therefrom by defendants. The answer was a denial of ownership and right of possession in plaintiffs, and of the ouster. Under said pleadings the court held that defendants were entitled to make any proof which would defeat plaintiffs' title, and might, without pleading it, introduce testimony assailing plaintiffs' deraignment of title, and show a forfeiture by failure of plaintiffs to do assessment work; also, without specially pleading it, a valid location and holding by one of the defendants as a qualified locator.

See, also, Chrast v. O'Connor, 41 Wash. 360, 83 P. 238, where, in a suit to recover land, defendants alleged title generally, without deraigning it, and it was held plaintiffs might, under a reply pleading the general issue, attack a deed in defendants' chain of title as a forgery.

The above cases cite as authority Mather v. Hutchinson, 25 Wis. 27, wherein it is said: "The evidence upon this subject was objected to, upon the ground that these facts were not alleged in the answer. But the action was for the recovery of real estate. The complaint was in the ordinary form, and did not disclose the origin of the plaintiff's title. And we have held that in such an action, under such a complaint, the defendant, under the general denial, must be allowed to prove anything which would defeat the title offered by the plaintiff. Any other rule would place him at a great disadvantage. The plaintiff, not being bound to disclose the title relied on in his complaint may, at the trial, offer any evidence of title which he pleases. With such a rule as to the plaintiff, it would be manifestly unjust to exclude the defendant from proving that the title offered by the plaintiff was void for fraud or any other reason, because he had not specifically set forth the facts in his answer. It would require him to foreknow and avoid, by specific allegations, a title which the plaintiff was not bound to disclose at all." See, also, Pomeroy's Code Remedies (5th Ed.) p. 908, § 555.

This conclusion is but a natural one under our system of pleading, and is an extension of the doctrine, and to an extent the converse of it, promulgated by section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the effect that the statement of any new matter in the answer in avoidance or constituting a defense or counterclaim must on the trial be deemed controverted by the opposite party. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 432, 51 P. 630; Jose Realty Co. v. Pavlicevich, 164 Cal. 613, 616, 130 P. 15; Wolf v. Gall, 176 Cal. 787, 789, 169 P. 1017.

This disposes of every question involved in this appeal. By this pronouncement a decree under the McEnerney Act is in nowise impaired, for in every judgment in rem or quasi in rem, such as a decree of distribution, it may always be shown, if it is a fact, that the decree was obtained by fraud, and that the party obtaining it holds it in trust for the defrauded party, unless by so holding the rights of innocent third parties are affected. As was said in Estate of Walker, 160 Cal. 547, 549, 117 P. 510, 511, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89: "The sanctity and immunity of a decree of distribution which has become final attaches to the decree itself, and not to those who under it may have derived an unconscionable advantage through fraud, accident, or mistake." See, to the same effect, Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 74, 63 P. 153; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 330, 67 P. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 419, 77 P. 1007; Wingerter v. Wingerter, 71 Cal. 105, 110, 11 P. 853; also, the recent case of Apablaza v. de Sepulveda, 91 Cal. App. 232, 267 P. 105.

HOWDEN v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ☞1—Statute permitting one declaring intention to become citizen to be admitted held not modified by later statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 275, 276; State Bar Act, § 24, as amended by St. 1929, pp. 1965, 1966).

State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 41) § 24, as amended by St. 1929, pp. 1965, 1966, concerning admission to practice law, does not restrict Code Civ. Proc. §§ 275, 276, under which one who has declared intention to become citizen is entitled to be admitted.

2. Attorney and client ☞4—Applicant who has declared intention to become citizen may properly take oath of office.

Applicant for admission to practice law, who has declared his bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States and is a resident of the state, may properly take statutory oath of office.

In Bank.

Original proceeding by Norman C. Howden for admission to practice law, opposed by the State Bar of California. Petition granted.

John R. Girling, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Delger Trowbridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Special counsel appearing for petitioner moves this court for his admission to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in the courts of this state. In support of his motion he presents the following facts:

Petitioner, over the age of 21 years, of good moral character, a resident of the state, has diligently and in good faith studied law for at least three years upon such subjects and under such conditions as the law and the rules of this court prescribe, and, lastly, has made a bona fide declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States in the manner required by law.

The sole opposition to this motion is based upon a contention that under the law, as now written, full citizenship is a prerequisite to admission to the bar. The issue is presented here because of the desire of the incorporated State Bar and Committee of Bar Examiners thereunder, to get from this court the measure of their power and duty respecting a new contingency.

The thought is that since the amendment to section 24 of the State Bar Act, enacted in 1929 (St. 1929, chap. 884, pp. 1965, 1966), sections 275 and 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure have been thereby repealed, in view of which situation, the court, having in mind the provisions of said amendment and the preservation of our institutions, should hold that citizenship must be possessed by the applicant before he may receive a license to practice law. In so far as here involved, said amendment reads as follows: "With the approval of the supreme court, and subject to the provisions of this act, the board shall have power to constitute and appoint a committee of not more than seven members with power to examine applicants and recommend to the supreme court for admission to practice law those who fulfill the requirements. Any person over the age of twenty-one years may apply to the board for admission to practice law upon presentation of satisfactory testimonials of his good moral character, together with satisfactory proof that for at least three years he has diligently and in good faith studied law. * * *

[1, 2] It requires but the contemplation of the above provisions of said section 24, as amended, to show that we cannot by any stretch of the imagination hold it to restrict the meaning of sections 275 and 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If it is to be given any interpretation out of harmony with said sections, it would be an interpretation which would enlarge upon and not restrict their provisions. Whether it does so enlarge upon said provisions of said sections is not here involved and need not here be considered. An applicant for admission who has declared his bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States and is a resident of this state may with perfect propriety take the oath of office prescribed by the statute. Consequently, the motion of petitioner must prevail.

It is therefore ordered that petitioner, Norman C. Howden, be and he is hereby admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law, authorized to practice in all the courts of this state, and the clerk will deliver him a certificate of such authority upon his taking the prescribed oath and signing the roll of attorneys.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

John L. TELEGDI, Petitioner, v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA, Respondent.
(L. A. 12020.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1929.

In Bank.

John R. Girling, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Delger Trowbridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Special counsel appearing for petitioner moves his admission to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in the courts of this state.

The identical state of facts found in the case of Norman C. Howden v. State Bar of California (Cal. Sup.) 283 P. 820, this day decided, are made a part of his petition. Therefore, upon authority of said last-mentioned case, it is hereby ordered that petitioner, John L. Telegdi, be and he is hereby admitted to practice in all the courts of this state, and the clerk will deliver him a certificate of such authority upon his taking the prescribed oath and signing the roll of attorneys.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

PEOPLE v. PHILLIPS. (Cr. 1883.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1929.

1. Criminal law §354—Excluding evidence tending to show that accused, although not insane, was so subnormal that he did not intend to defraud, held proper.

In prosecution for forgery, excluding evidence offered for purpose of showing that, although accused was in a state of mind which was not legally insane, he was in such a subnormal state of mind that he did not intend to defraud, held proper, since the law does not recognize partial insanity.

2. Criminal law §354—Excluding evidence tending to show accused's state of mind at trial held proper, where offense was committed about five years previously.

In forgery prosecution, where trial was had on July 25, 1929, excluding evidence offered to show accused's present state of mind held proper, where offense was committed on December 11, 1923.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

J. P. Phillips was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frederic H. Vercoe, Public Defender, Franklin Padan, Chief Deputy Public Defender, and Richard F. Bird, Deputy Public Defender, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. By an information filed on December 21, 1923, by the district attorney of Los Angeles county the defendant was charged with the crime of forgery, alleged to have been committed on December 11, 1923. The defendant interposed a plea of "not guilty" and also one of "not guilty by reason of insanity." His trial was set for February 11, 1924, but he absconded and was not reapprehended until April 29, 1929. His trial upon the first plea came on for hearing on July 25, 1929, and on the second plea on the day following. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and also found the defendant sane. The court denied his motion for a new trial, and he is here upon an appeal from the judgment and from the order refusing to vacate the verdict.

[1] The appellant raises but one question. During the first trial he offered testimony to show that his mental condition was subnormal; it being the contention of his counsel that there is "between the state where a person is normal mentally and the state where he is legally insane, a fixed twilight zone where he is neither insane nor normal mentally." This proof was tendered "for the purpose of showing that he was in such a state of mind he did not entertain an intent to defraud, which is the gist of the crime on which" the appellant was being tried. The quotations are taken from the offer of proof of counsel during the trial, and clearly and succinctly set forth the theory he had in mind. And perhaps the question here will be made more clear if we also set down an excerpt from appellant's brief which concisely states the proposition, as follows: "The trial court erred in refusing to allow appellant to introduce evidence at his trial on his plea of not guilty regarding his subnormal condition, not amounting to insanity as affecting the question of the intent or lack of intent with which the alleged criminal act was committed."

Counsel for appellant, while recognizing the force of the opinion in People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767, 769, attempt to distinguish the instant cause therefrom. Their argument is plausible and earnest, but without substance, as a few references to the language of that decision will demonstrate. It is there said: "The arguments touching the validity of these provisions have been advanced from three points of view: First * * * Second, that, when properly construed, the statute eliminates from the consideration of the jury during the trial of the general issue the question of the 'legal insanity' of the defendant—the only kind of insanity which excuses one from punishment for a crime committed—but does not prevent the introduction of evidence tending to establish the mental condition of the accused at the time the offense was committed, for the purpose of showing a lack of criminal intent, malice, or premeditation, such evidence to be also considered by the jury, in the exercise of its discretion in a trial for murder, in fixing the degree of the crime and the punishment at life imprisonment or the extreme penalty, if it finds the offense to have been murder in the first degree. * * *" (Italics ours.) In our opinion the words of the Supreme Court constitute a restatement of the proposition advanced by the appellant. We can scarcely imagine two arguments more nearly the same when relating to a subject as new to the profession. How does the court answer? In these words:

"The trial court committed no error in strictly following the letter of the statute (Pen. Code, §§ 1020 and 1026) and excluding, on the trial of the general issue of not guilty, all evidence tending to show the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the commission of the offense. The doctrine of 'partial insanity,' announced by some authorities, particularly Wharton in his work on Criminal Law, has never been recognized as the law in this jurisdiction. In this state, in order that 'insanity may be available as a defense to a crime charged, it must appear that the defendant, when the act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of the wrongful nature of the act committed. If he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. Although he may be laboring under partial insanity—as, for instance, suffering from some insane delusion or hallucination—still if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences, if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal, and that if he does the act he will do wrong, such partial insanity or the existence of such delusion or hallucination is not sufficient to relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts.' People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 554, 89 P. 124, 129; People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 225, 14 P. 849. See, also, People v. Hurtado, 63 Cal. 288. In this state 'so far as accountability to the law is concerned, there is no middle ground.' People v. Perry, 195 Cal. 623, 639, 234 P. 890, 896. Such is the law in many jurisdictions. Warner v. State, 114 Ind. 137, 16 N. E. 189; United States v. Lee, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 489, 54 Am. Rep. 293; Commonwealth v. Wireback, 190 Pa. 138, 42 A. 542, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625; Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28; Wartena v. State, 105 Ind. 445, 5 N. E. 20; Kirby v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. R. 63, 150 S. W. 455. 'Protection is always afforded in courts of law to persons of unsound mind. Distinction is made between sanity and insanity in people, but not as respects their grade of intelligence. The law does not attempt to measure degrees of intellect nor to make distinction with respect thereto, where the power of thought and reason exists.' State v. Schlaps, 78 Mont. 560, 578, 254 P. 858, 863. In 14 R. C. L. page 599, § 54, it is said: 'It is the general rule that insanity, when interposed as a defense in a criminal prosecution, is either a complete defense or none at all, and it has been held that there is no degree of insanity sufficient to acquit of murder but not of manslaughter.' A valuable note on this subject is found in the case of Knights v. State, 76 Am. St. Rep. 83 (58 Neb. 225, 78 N. W. 508).

"It follows, therefore, that any evidence tending to establish the insanity of the defendant under his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity at the time of the commission of the homicide, other than evidence of the immediate circumstances of the offense, would have been irrelevant and immaterial on the trial of the general issue as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant raised by the general plea of not guilty. As the statute accorded the defendant his full right, and ample opportunity to submit to a jury his plea of insanity at the time of the commission of the offense, in excuse of his act and as a reason why no penalty of the law should be visited upon him, it follows that the trial court correctly excluded the evidence on the trial of the general issue.

"Furthermore, the only evidence admissible for the purpose of enabling the jury to determine whether the death penalty or life imprisonment should be imposed in the event the defendant should be found guilty of murder in the first degree was the evidence which the court did admit, and which concerned 'the circumstances connected with the offense.' People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 609, 613, et seq., 219 P. 456. See, also, People v.

WRIGHT v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES GAS CO. et al. (Civ. 3966.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 110, 148 P. 928. The insanity of a defendant cannot be used for the purpose of reducing his crime from murder in the first degree to murder in the second degree. If responsible at all in this respect, he is responsible in the same degree as a sane man, and if he is not responsible at all he is entitled to an acquittal in both degrees. State v. Maioni, 78 N. J. L. 339, 74 A. 526, 528, 20 Ann. Cas. 204." An analogous argument was also advanced in People v. Lazarus (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 145, 148, and its soundness denied.

[2] This apt language precludes the necessity of further discussion of the subject. However there is another fatal defect. Counsel, when asked by the court if he intended to show that appellant was in a subnormal state of mind at the time of the commission of the crime, responded: "Yes. Of course the only evidence I can produce though, tending to show that he was in that state of mind at the time of the commission of the crime is the evidence as to his present mental state, together with the testimony of a number of doctors to the effect that his mental condition is such that if it exists now it probably existed five years ago, five and a half years ago." It will, of course, be borne in mind that the trial was had on July 25, 1929, while the offense was committed December 11, 1923. In People v. Lazarus, supra, it was urged by the defendant that he was entitled under the general plea to offer evidence as to his mental condition prior to the commission of the offense charged as bearing upon his intent at the time it was committed. The court said: "The record discloses, however, that the evidence which said defendant thus desired to offer upon his plea of 'not guilty' did not in any way involve the facts and circumstances immediately attending the commission of his crime, but related wholly to mental states and their causes existing and affecting the defendant during a period long preceding the date of his crime. As to this evidence the record discloses that he was allowed the fullest opportunity to present the same upon his trial upon the plea of 'not guilty by reason of insanity,' and his case in that respect is thus brought directly within and is fully disposed of under the recent decisions of this court in the cases of People v. Troche, 273 P. 767; People v. Fook, 273 P. 779; and People v. Coen, 271 P. 1074. We therefore find no prejudicial error on the part of the trial court in confining said defendant with relation to such evidence to his proofs under his plea of 'not guilty by reason of insanity.'"

The situations are sufficiently comparable as to warrant us in saying that the case is squarely in point.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; BURNELL, J. pro tem.

1. Negligence $\S$ 48—Owner of premises is liable for injuries to others by dangerous instrumentality or condition, of which he knew or might reasonably have known.

Liability of the owner of premises for injuries sustained by persons who have entered thereon depends on owner's knowledge of the dangerous instrumentality or condition not known to the person injured, but such owner will be held to have known that which he reasonably should have known.

2. Negligence $\S$ 61(1)—That act of another concurred with defendant's negligence does not make latter not proximate cause of injury.

The fact that another party's act may concur in the negligence of defendant does not make the latter's negligence not the proximate cause of the injury.

3. Negligence $\S$ 59—Negligent act is proximate cause of injury, if it might reasonably have been foreseen that some injury would result; it not being essential that particular injury should or could reasonably have been foreseen.

Where an act or omission is negligent, it is not necessary, to render it the proximate cause, that the negligent person could or might have foreseen the particular consequences or precise form of injury, or particular manner in which it would occur, if by exercise of reasonable care it might have been foreseen or anticipated that some injury would result.

4. Negligence $\S$ 121(2)—Where cause of injury is under management of defendant, and accident is such as does not ordinarily happen, if management exercises reasonable care, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies.

Where a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such that in ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, in the absence of explanation by defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care.

5. Gas $\S$ 20(2)—Res ipsa loquitur doctrine held applicable to explosion of gas in apartment owned and controlled by defendant.

Evidence in action for injuries from explosion of gas in apartment under exclusive management and control of defendant owner held to render proper application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

6. Gas $\S$ 16—Owner's want of knowledge of escaping gas in apartment was immaterial to liability for injuries to another.

In action for injuries by explosion of gas in apartment owned and controlled by defendant, defendant's actual knowledge or want of knowledge as to escaping gas was immaterial, if circumstances were such that he should have known of such escaping gas.

7. Gas ⚡19—Plaintiff, striking match to light cigar, was not contributorily negligent, precluding recovery from owner of apartment in which escaping gas exploded.

Plaintiff was not contributorily negligent by reason of lighting match or cigar while visiting apartment owned and controlled by defendant owner, as result of which gas explosion ensued and injury resulted.

8. Gas ⚡20(2)—Evidence held to sustain recovery for injuries by explosion of escaping gas in apartment.

Evidence held to sustain judgment for plaintiff for injuries by explosion of escaping gas in apartment owned and controlled by defendant.

9. Trial ⚡260(1)—Error cannot be predicated on refusal of instruction covered by instructions given.

There is no error in refusing instructions completely covered by other instructions.

10. Appeal and error ⚡839(1)—Defendant, appealing only from judgment for damages for plaintiff against him, cannot predicate error on instruction to find for codefendant on cross-complaint filed by defendant.

Defendant, appealing only from judgment for plaintiff for damages against him, cannot predicate error on an instruction to find in favor of codefendant on cross-complaint filed by appellant.

11. Damages ⚡132(1)—$8,000 as compensation for injuries in explosion of escaping gas held not excessive, $2,000 thereof representing special expenses and losses incurred by plaintiff.

Award of damages in the sum of $8,000 to plaintiff, seriously injured in explosion of escaping gas, held not shown by evidence to be excessive, or to be affected by improper motive of jury, particularly when $2,000 represented special expenses and loss incurred by plaintiff by reason of injuries.

12. New trial ⚡28—Denial of new trial in personal injury action on ground of plaintiff's collapse on witness stand held not abuse of discretion.

Denial of new trial on motion based on collapse of plaintiff during course of his examination on witness stand in personal injury case held not abuse of discretion; trial court, in addition to the affidavits presenting it, having observed the occurrence, which took place in his presence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by Paul S. Wright against the Southern Counties Gas Company and Juan Jimenez. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant Jimenez, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Clewett, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. W. Sorenson, Henry Brown, and Joe Crider, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This action was prosecuted to recover damages for and on account of injuries suffered by the plaintiff by reason of an explosion of gas in a certain apartment house owned by the defendant Juan Jimenez. The gas was furnished by the defendant Southern Counties Gas Company; the jury returned a verdict against the defendant Juan Jimenez in the sum of $8,000, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant Jimenez appeals.

The evidence upon which the verdict rests is substantially as follows: The transcript shows that on the 19th day of May, 1926, and prior thereto, the defendant Juan Jimenez was the owner and in exclusive control of a certain four-flat building located in San Pedro. It was in one of the flats of this building that the explosion occurred. The flat in question had been occupied until about March 18, 1926, and up to that date had been rented to and occupied by one Mrs. Rose Bartlett. On March 18, 1926, Mrs. Bartlett moved out of the flat, and it remained unoccupied until the date of the explosion on May 19, 1926. It appears from the testimony that, when Mrs. Bartlett left the flat, she ordered the gas company to turn off the gas. This order was executed by the gas company. In turning off the gas, the company not only turned off the stopcock controlling the passageway for gas into the meter, but sealed and locked the same; the seal used for this purpose consisted of two pieces of iron, which fitted over the valve, protecting it from interference and making it inaccessible, so long as the seal remained with its catch unbroken. This catch, however, does not appear to have been made of very substantial material, and a slight blow from a hammer or other like instrument would readily break the catch. With the catch destroyed, the seal would require a new catch in order to render it again effective. An inspection of the meter was made by the gas company on April 19, 1926. On that date the lock was in place and the meter closed, and an inspection of the dial showed that no gas had passed through the meter since the reading on March 18th. It also appeared that the lock was in the position in which it was placed and left by the gas company on the date that the meter was sealed. The testimony further shows that in the living room of the flat in which the explosion occurred there was a gascock used for turning on and turning off gas when the gas heater in the living room was being used. After the explosion, which occurred on the 19th day of May, 1926, an inspection of the premises revealed that this gascock was open, and that the gas heater in the room in which the explosion occurred was situated a few feet from the gascock just referred to, but was not connected therewith.

As we have said, the testimony shows that the flat in question was under the exclusive control of the defendant Jimenez. No other person had a key thereto. After Mrs. Bart-left left the premises, and preceding the date of the explosion, the defendant Jiminez visited the premises several times. At a date approximately two weeks before the explosion, the defendant Jiminez moved certain furniture into the flat in question, including a small gas heater, which he placed in the living room a short distance from the gascock referred to, this being the gas heater which we have heretofore mentioned. After the explosion a reading of the gas meter showed that 97,100 cubic feet of gas had passed through the meter from the time it was read on April 19, 1926, to May 19, 1926. The lock and seal on the meter were found broken and the gas turned on. Testimony was introduced by witnesses familiar with the flow of gas, who testified that it would take from 12 to 14 days for 97,100 cubic feet of gas to pass through the aperture the size of the one in the living room where the gascock was found open. The transcript contains evidence to the effect that the defendant Jiminez demonstrated the kitchen stove for the plaintiff on the day of the explosion, just prior thereto. The testimony in this particular is to the effect that on the day in question the plaintiff and the defendant Jiminez went to the flat for the purpose of making an inspection of the same. The plaintiff's visit was to determine whether he would rent the flat. The plaintiff's testimony is to the effect that he and the defendant Juan Jiminez went into the kitchen, where the defendant Jiminez lighted a match, turned on the gas in the kitchen stove at the various burners, and that in so doing the pilot light was first used, and then that said defendant turned on the gas of the respective burners, lighting the same. This testimony was contradicted by the defendant Jiminez. From the kitchen the plaintiff and the defendant Jiminez passed through other rooms and into the living room containing the open gascock. Neither of the parties detected the odor of gas. While there the plaintiff struck a match for the purpose of lighting a cigar. An explosion immediately occurred, severely injuring the plaintiff, as well as the defendant. The transcript also contains testimony to the effect that the range of explosibility of natural gas is from 5 per cent. to 12 per cent.; that a different proportion might burn, if once ignited, but that it would not detonate.

[1] It is also admitted upon this appeal that no one other than the Southern Counties Gas Company had the right to interfere with the lock and seal upon the meter which we have mentioned. That it had been interfered with, however, by some one, is likewise unquestioned. While the testimony shows that the defendant Jiminez had exclusive control of the apartment in which the explosion occurred; had visited the same several times after it had been vacated by the previous tenant; was in the apartment about two weeks preceding the explosion, and placed therein certain furniture, including a gas heater near where the open gascock was found; that it would take about two weeks for 97,100 cubic feet of gas to pass through the open gascock; that the defendant Jiminez knew that the gas was flowing through the meter, by reason of his having lighted the gas flowing through the kitchen stove, which would be fed by the same meter; it is contended that this testimony is not sufficient to support the verdict.

In this particular our attention is called to a number of cases supporting the text found in 20 Ruling Case Law, on page 56, to the effect that "the mere ownership of land or buildings does not render one liable for injuries sustained by persons who have entered thereon or therein. * * * Nor is there any presumption of negligence on the part of an owner or occupier merely upon a showing that an injury has been sustained by one while rightfully upon the premises. The true ground of liability is the proprietor's superior knowledge of the perilous instrumentality and the danger therefrom to persons going upon the property. It is when the perilous instrumentality is known to the owners or occupants, and not known to the persons injured, that a recovery is admitted." This statement of the rule is unobjectionable so far as it goes, but it stops short of stating the full rule as to liability of an owner of the premises involved. If the circumstances are such as to show that the owner, with reasonable diligence, might have become aware of the peril, or should have known the same, liability attaches. The text further quoted by the appellant is in the negative form, and is: "On the other hand, an injury is not actionable if it could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated." (This is found on page 13 of the same volume.)

The authorities are numerous to the effect that a defendant is not bound to keep his premises absolutely safe, but it is universally held that an owner of premises must use ordinary care to keep the premises in a safe and suitable condition, so that they will not unnecessarily or unreasonably expose any one to danger who may lawfully be thereon. It is also well settled that, in actions based upon negligence, what an owner of premises reasonably should have known, he will be held to have known. Again, in applying the law relative to the duty of an owner of premises, all the inferences which a jury may properly draw from the testimony introduced must be kept in mind. Thus, the testimony in this case shows that the meter was locked and sealed. It likewise shows that some one tampered with the lock and seal and turned the stopcock, so that the gas would again flow through the meter. It also shows that it would require about two weeks for the quantity of gas to flow through an aperture the size of the open gascock in the living room, registered by the meter. It likewise shows that the defendant had control of the flat in question; that he was in the flat about two weeks before the explosion, had taken furniture there preparatory to renting the same, and had placed in the living room, near where the open gascock was found, a gas heating stove; and that on the day of the explosion he tested the gas in the cook stove in the kitchen. If, upon this testimony, the jury was warranted in drawing the inference that the defendant had tampered with the lock and seal on the gas meter, and had opened the gascock in the living room and subsequently failed to close the same, then and in that case the verdict is amply supported.

Again, if the jury was warranted in drawing the inference that the one who tampered with the lock and seal on the gas meter, and turned the gas therein, also opened the gascock in the living room to ascertain if the gas was flowing through the same, then and in that case the natural inference would be that the defendant negligently failed to close the gascock in the living room. There is no direct testimony to the effect that the defendant opened the gascock in the living room, or that he tampered with the gas meter, but there is plenty of testimony to the effect that the defendant was upon the premises at about the time when the tampering must have taken place, and that the gascock was opened by some one and left open near where the defendant had placed a gas heater. The transcript contains no testimony of any person having broken into or trespassed upon the premises in question, and during all the time the defendant Jiminez had possession of the key to the premises, and the premises were inaccessible to any person other than the defendant Jiminez. This is shown by reason of the exclusive control of the premises by the defendant Jiminez, and the absence of any testimony whatever that any other person had trespassed upon the flat. If, upon this testimony, and all that we have set forth, the jury had a right to infer that the defendant was the one who opened and left opened the gascock in the living room, then and in that case the verdict should be upheld.

[2] Again, it is further argued by the appellant that it is not shown that the negligence of the defendant Jiminez was the sole cause of the injury, or rather, as stated by the appellant, that the negligence of the defendant Jiminez was not the proximate cause of the injury; the assumption being that the proximate cause of the injury was the tampering with the lock and seal on the gas meter. However, we do not need to go into this question further than to state that, if the gascock had not been left open in the living room, the tampering with the meter would have occasioned no injury. The fact that another party's act may concur in the negligence does not furnish any defense. The law with reference to concurrent negligence is thus stated in 45 C. J. p. 920: "As a general rule it may be said that negligence, to render a person liable, need not be the sole cause of the injury. It is sufficient that his negligence, concurring with one or more efficient causes other than plaintiff's fault, is the proximate cause of the injury, so that where several causes combined to produce injuries, a person is not relieved of liability because he is responsible for only one of them, it being sufficient that his negligence is an efficient cause without which the injury would not have resulted." The text cited further shows that all that is necessary to be shown is that the person sought to be charged was responsible for one of the causes which united in producing the injury.

[3] Again, as shown by the text in the same volume on page 918, "Where an act or omission is negligent it is not necessary, to render it the proximate cause, that the person committing it could or might have foreseen the particular consequences or precise form of the injury, or the particular manner in which it would occur, if, by the exercise of reasonable care, it might have been foreseen or anticipated that some injury would result." Common understanding is all that is necessary to anticipate, not only a possible, but a probable, explosion as resulting from escaping gas.

It would serve no useful purpose to review all the authorities cited by the appellant, but we will give some attention to the principal case upon which the appellant relies, to wit, the case of Leonard v. Enterprise Realty Co., 187 Ky. 578, 219 S. W. 1066, and reported with annotations in 10 A. L. R. 238. The syllabus in that case is in the following words: "A property owner is not liable for injury to one whom he permits to inspect the premises with a view to leasing them, by explosion of gas escaping from a pipe which an outgoing tenant had disconnected without shutting off the flow of gas, without the knowledge of the property owner or reasonable opportunity on his part to discover the fact."

A recital of the facts set forth in the opinion in that case demonstrates the inapplicability of anything there said to the case at bar. The facts are that the plaintiff, desiring to rent an apartment, passed in front of an apartment belonging to the realty company, between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and as he passed by he noticed a moving van taking furniture from the apartment, and thereupon he obtained a key to a back door of the apartment, from one of the men moving the furniture. The defendant went immediately to the office of an agent of the realty company, reaching there about 5 p. m., reported he had a key, and asked permission to look at the apartment, which was granted. After supper appellant and his wife went to the apartment, arriving there about 6:30 p. m. Appellant told his wife to remain on the sidewalk, while he went around to the rear of the building and unlocked the rear door, so that he could come through and let her in the front way. Appellant unlocked the back door, which leads to a kitchenette. From here the appellant walked into the front hall. It being dark, he struck a match to find his way, and as he did so an explosion took place, severely injuring the appellant. Following the explosion, investigation disclosed an open gas pipe in the kitchenette, from which the gas stove had been disconnected; the theory of the appellant being that the man who disconnected the stove failed to shut off the gas, etc. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover, the facts showing conclusively that the owner of the premises had had no opportunity to examine the same between the time when the former tenant had removed therefrom and the entering of the plaintiff. No knowledge of the condition of the premises, as left by the out-going tenant, could be imputed to the owner by reason of the lack of opportunity. The plaintiff by his own act and conduct, and by his own testimony, showed such lack of knowledge and lack of opportunity to acquire knowledge on the part of the owner. A recital of the facts disclosed in the Leoenard Case furnishes a complete answer to the appellant's extended argument based thereon.

[4, 5] In addition to the inferences which may be drawn by the jury from the facts which we have culled from the record, the respondent urges the doctrine known as res ipsa loquitur. Many definitions of this rule have been given, but the quotation used by this court, found in the case of Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Texas Holding Co., 81 Cal. App. 61, 252 P. 1032, 1084, taken from the case of Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 P. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, will answer as well as any: "When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." What this court said in the case of Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Texas Holding Co., applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to the circumstances there involved, we think applicable to the circumstances disclosed in this case.

This court again, in the case of Brown v. Davis, 84 Cal. App. 180, 257 P. 877, had occasion to apply the same doctrine, and what was there said is applicable here. In Van Horn v. Pacific Refining & Roofing Co., 27 Cal. App. 105, 148 P. 951, 952, the doctrine was applied, and in answer to the appellant's contention that it could not apply by reason of the possibility of some other person being liable, the court used the following language: "But the appellant contends that, because the third possibility exists, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot be given application. In support of this contention, counsel for the appellant argues that the mere fact that persons other than the defendant or its employees were working in and about the building, and had access to the particular floor where this steam pipe was located, would be sufficient to prevent the application of the rule, because some one or other of these might possibly have so struck or tampered with this pipe as to have caused the loosening of its cap to such an extent that it would be liable to blow off at any moment under pressure. We think this argument, unsustained, as it is by any semblance of evidence or proof tending to show such interference with this pipe or cap, carries the possibilities in cases of this kind entirely too far." That was a case in which the plaintiff was injured by the blowing off of a cap placed insecurely upon a steam pipe. The court further in its opinion goes on to say that, if such possibilities are allowed to prevent the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it would in effect entirely eliminate the doctrine.

A good case illustrating where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply is that of Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 549, 66 P. 787, 55 L. R. A. 608, where the question presented was whether the operators of a street railway car or the driver of a brewery wagon were negligent in causing the collision of the wagon with the street car. Thus, where the negligence of one is sufficient to occasion injury without the negligence of the other party, no inference of negligence as against both can be drawn. On the other hand, if the collision could not have occurred without the concurrent negligence of both parties, then and in that case the doctrine would have applied. In the case at bar the doctrine applies as against the owner of the premises because, irrespective of whether the gas company was negligent, or whether some unknown person broke the seal and the lock, no injury would have followed if the gascock in the living room had not been left open. The one who left the gascock open, or who, by reasonable inferences from the testimony, may be concluded to have left the gascock open, stands alone in his negligence, irrespective of what others may have done. If both defendants in this case were negligent, both would be liable. Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134. An explosion of gas was involved in that case. The court said, quoting from the syllabus: "Where an explosion of gas causing damage to a patron of a restaurant results from the joint negligence of the gas company in not discovering and repairing a leak in its pipes, and of the restaurateur in bringing a light in contact with the gas, whereby it explodes, the person damaged may recover from either or both at his election."

The case of Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Skeel, 182 Ind. 593, 106 N. E. 365, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 474, relied upon by the appellant, showing that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could not apply, is based upon circumstances showing that an attempt was being made to hold the defendant liable for the acts of an independent contractor. Nothing of the kind is involved in this action.

[6-8] That the defendant Jiminez did not know or realize that gas had been escaping into the living room when he entered, accompanied by the plaintiff, is not material. If the circumstances disclosed are sufficient to show that he should have known that gas was escaping, and that gas would escape therein if the gascock heretofore mentioned were left open, and the circumstances are sufficient to warrant the jury in concluding that the defendant Jiminez was the person who left the stopcock open, then the defendant's actual knowledge is immaterial. As said in Gobrecht v. Beckwith, 82 N. H. 415, 135 A. 20, 52 A. L. R. 858: "One under duty to use care for which knowledge is necessary cannot escape liability for negligence because of voluntary ignorance." In addition to what we have said relative to the defendant Jiminez having lighted the gas in the kitchen stove, we may state that the transcript discloses testimony strongly corroborative of the plaintiff's version of this occurrence. The fact that the plaintiff was the one who struck a match for the purpose of lighting a cigar, with the resultant explosion, does not suffice to charge him with negligence. It has been held that, even where the injured invitee or licensee smells the gas and lights a match the question of his contributory negligence is for the jury. Dowler v. Citizens' Gas & Oil Co., 71 W. Va. 417, 76 S. E. 845, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 341. The record to which we have referred and the authorities cited we think sufficient to take the case to the jury and also to support its verdict.

[9] It is next contended that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and especially in refusing to give an instruction to the jury requested by the defendant, which reads as follows: "You are instructed that, unless you believe from the evidence that the defendant Juan Jiminez ought reasonably to have foreseen that injury to the plaintiff might probably happen as a result of entering said premises, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendant Juan Jiminez." An examination of the record shows that this instruction is completely covered by a subsequent instruction given by the court at the request of the defendant, and modified by the court to make it an accurate statement of the law. This instruction reads: "You are instructed that one is not liable for negligence, where no injurious consequences could have reasonably been contemplated or foreseen as the result of the act or omission complained of, and if you believe from the evidence that no injurious consequences could reasonably have been contemplated or foreseen by defendant Juan Jiminez as the result of inviting plaintiff to enter said premises, then your verdict must be for the defendant Juan Jiminez." The modification consisted in the insertion of the words "or foreseen."

It would unduly extend this opinion to set forth and analyze the voluminous instructions given by the court, which covered every possible phase of the questions presented to the jury. We content ourselves with the statement that a careful reading of the instructions leads inevitably to the conclusion that the court in no wise erred to the prejudice of the appellant. The instruction covering the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and the effect given thereto, is amply supported by the reasoning and the authorities cited by this court in the case of Brown v. Davis, supra.

[10, 11] As to the instruction advising the court to find in favor of the defendant Southern Counties Gas Company, on the cross-complaint filed by the defendant Juan Jiminez, it is sufficient to say that this appeal is taken only from the judgment in favor of Paul S. Wright against the defendant Juan Jiminez, awarding the plaintiff the damages heretofore mentioned in this opinion. In this particular it is urged that the damages awarded the plaintiff were excessive. This assignment of error is not followed by anything which would indicate anything of merit. All that is stated is that the total special expenses and loss incurred by the plaintiff by reason of his injuries amounted to the sum of $2,000, leaving $6,000 as compensation for pain, suffering, etc. As the assignment is only in general language, and nothing cited to support the assignment, it is sufficient generally to state that an examination of the testimony relative to the plaintiff's injuries shows that the jury did not act improperly, or award damages from any improper or illegal motive.

[12] It is finally urged that the court erred in denying appellant's motion for a new trial. This motion was based upon the collapse of the plaintiff during the course of his examination upon the witness stand. Affidavits were submitted to the court, pro and con, on the question as to whether such collapse was actual or simulated. The occurrence took place in the presence of the trial court, which gave the trial court a basis for its ruling, which is lacking here. However, placing our decision wholly upon the affidavits presented, we are unable to say that the court abused its discretion in denying the appellant's motion.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

1. Payment ⇨16(1), 21—Giving note or check in amount of debt does not constitute payment, without express or implied agreement to that effect.

The giving of a note or check of a debtor or third party for the amount of a debt does not constitute payment, unless there is agreement between the parties that it shall be so accepted, and agreement may be either express or implied from circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Payment.]

2. Appeal and error ⇨1008(1)—Payment ⇨76(4)—Whether note for amount of debt is accepted as payment is question of fact, and decision of trier of facts thereon is conclusive.

Question whether note given for amount of debt is accepted for payment is question for trier of facts in each case, and on appeal verdict of jury or finding of trial court is conclusive as to that issue.

3. Payment ⇨76(4)—Whether note in amount of debt was accepted by defendant as payment, defeating counterclaim in action to recover moneys collected by defendant, held question of fact.

In action to recover sum of money collected by defendant for plaintiff, in which defendant counterclaimed for debt due him from plaintiff, question whether note received by defendant from plaintiff was accepted as payment in amount of its face value for stock sold plaintiff by defendant held question of fact for trial court.

4. Principal and agent ⇨66—Duty of agent to account for principal's money is similar to duty of trustee to beneficiary.

The relation of principal and agent is fiduciary in character, and the duty of an agent to account for money in his hands belonging to his principal is similar to that of a trustee in possession of money belonging to the beneficiary.

5. Partnership ⇨125—Each partner has authority in partnership affairs to act as agent for other partners.

Partnership is a branch of the law of agency, and each partner has authority in partnership affairs to act as agent for other partners.

6. Limitation of actions ⇨39(9)—Limitation statute applicable to action for accounting between partners held to apply to principal's action against agent to recover moneys collected (Code Civ. Proc. § 343).

Code Civ. Proc. § 343, providing four-year limitation for action for accounting between partners, where one of partners in possession of partnership property refuses to account, held applicable to principal's action against agent to recover for moneys collected by agent, which agent failed to remit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Joseph B. Swan against John Smith. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Law & Overholt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mayo Thomas and Leonard E. Thomas, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff commenced this action December 10, 1925, to recover the sum of $7,249.23 collected for him by the defendant. In his answer the defendant "admits that between the 25th day of March, 1922, and June 24, 1922, he collected the sum of $7,249.23 belonging to plaintiff, but denies that he collected same on any agreement or understanding that same was to be applied other than on indebtedness in the sum of $91,586.33 then due and owing defendant from the plaintiff." The answer alleges that the plaintiff's alleged cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. By way of counterclaim it is alleged:

"That on or about the 15th day of May, 1919, in the Dominion of Canada, plaintiff became indebted to this defendant in the sum of $91,586.33, for and on account of the sale of one-half of the issued capital stock of the Ajax Coal & Mining Company, a Canadian corporation, which said stock was then and there delivered to said plaintiff, who then and there agreed with the defendant to pay said defendant the sum of $91,586.33, no part of which has been paid, excepting the sum of $73,835.56, and interest to December 7, 1921; that there is now due and unpaid from said plaintiff to this defendant the sum of $17,750.77, with interest from December 7, 1921."

Paragraph 4 of the court's findings reads as follows:

"That in respect to the said defendant's counterclaim, this court finds that on or about the 15th day of May, 1919, plaintiff became indebted to the defendant in the sum of $91,586.33; that in partial payment of this said sum, and on or about the said 15th day of May, 1919, the said plaintiff delivered to this defendant his promissory note in the sum of $66,586.33, which said promissory note with interest thereon was duly paid in full to this defendant by the said plaintiff on or before December 28th, 1920; that in completing the payment of said sum of $91,586.33, as aforesaid, this said plaintiff assigned, indorsed and delivered to this defendant, on or about the 15th day of May, 1919, a certain secured promissory note, drawn by M. A. Brown and H. H. Brown and in the sum of $25,000, which said promissory note was given, indorsed and delivered by the said plaintiff and received and accepted by the said defendant as full and complete payment of the obligation of $91,586.33, as aforesaid; that the said plaintiff is not now, nor has he been subsequent to the 28th day of December, 1920, indebted to this defendant in any sum or at all."

Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount prayed for in the complaint and interest thereon, and the defendant has appealed.

In respondent's brief it is urged that he is not liable as an indorser on the Brown note, referred to in paragraph 4 of the findings, on the ground, among others, that the note was not presented for payment at the time it became due, but there was no such issue before the court. As said in appellant's reply brief, the cause of action stated in the counterclaim "is not an action against the indorser of the note but an action upon the original indebtedness." The issues made by the pleadings were whether the Brown note was received by the defendant as payment, in the amount of its face value, for the shares of stock sold to the plaintiff, and whether plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations.

Relative to the purchase of the shares of stock, the plaintiff testified in part as follows: "We had a conversation * * * in which he said, 'Joe, I want to sell out to you and go back to Los Angeles.' * * * I told him that I couldn't pay him out; I didn't have the money. * * * He worked on my sympathies, and I said to him, 'Mr. Smith, the only way that I would consider about buying you out at this time would be if you will take the Brown note as part payment of the $25,000;' and he said he would be glad to do that, and made comments on his opinion of Mr. M. A. Brown's ability to pay, even though that business didn't pay out; under those conditions I agreed. * * * He brought the note over from the safe, turned it upside down, and he says, 'Now, as I am taking this as mine, I want you to indorse it to me, so that I can handle it without bothering you.'" In a part of plaintiff's deposition, read by counsel for the defendant in cross-examination of the plaintiff, he testified, referring to the note: "I told him that he must take this, if I agreed to allow him to withdraw, as his property, and he agreed to it. * * * He said he felt secure in the note, for the reason that M. A. Brown was a thrifty kind of fellow, and, even if the store wouldn't pay it, he would get into something that would pay."

[1-3] "The giving of a note or check of a debtor or a third party for the amount of a debt does not constitute payment, unless there is an agreement between the parties that it shall be so accepted. * * * The general rule above stated does not require that, in order to constitute the giving of a note or check a payment, there shall be express words or writing agreeing that the instrument shall be absolute payment. The circumstances and the conduct of the parties, taken together, may show an understanding that the paper is taken in satisfaction of the debt. * * * It is a question for the trier of facts in every case whether a note given for the amount of a debt was accepted as payment, and upon appeal the verdict of the jury or the finding of the trial court is conclusive as to the issue." 20 Cal. Jur. 920-928.

[4-6] The defendant was the agent of the plaintiff for the collection of the money for the recovery of which the action was brought. "The relation of principal and agent is fiduciary in character." 1 Cal. Jur. 788. "The acts of the agent are judged with almost, if not quite, the same strictness as those of a trustee." Williams v. Lockwood, 175 Cal. 598, 601, 166 P. 587, 588. The duty of an agent to account for money in his hands belonging to his principal is similar to that of a trustee in possession of money belonging to the beneficiary of a trust. "Partnership is a branch of the law of agency, each partner having authority in partnership affairs to act * * * as agent for the other partners." 2 C. J. 425. The statute of limitations applicable to an action for an accounting between partners, where one of the partners in possession of partnership property refuses to account therefor, is section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a limitation of four years. Freeman v. Donohoe, 65 Cal. App. 65, 81, 94, 223 P. 431. The same section must be held applicable in this case, and it follows that no part of the plaintiff's cause of action was barred at the time the action was commenced.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TIBBETTS. (Cr. 1548.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Criminal law §562—Improbability or falsity of some testimony was immaterial, where evidence supported allegations of information.

Where evidence introduced by prosecution supported every allegation contained in information, it was immaterial that certain witnesses may have sworn falsely or that some of sworn statements of state's witnesses were inherently improbable.

2. Witnesses §40(1)—Court did not err in permitting 8 year old prosecutrix to testify following careful examination as to her mental development (Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 2).

Trial court did not err, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 2, in permitting 8 year old prosecutrix to testify after careful examination of her as to her mental development.

3. Jury ⇨131(15)—Objection was properly sustained to query of defendant's attorney in selecting jury whether they would follow instruction that defendant need only establish evidence raising reasonable doubt (Pen. Code, § 1096).

Objection was properly sustained to statement of defendant's attorney in selection of jury inquiring of jury whether they would follow instruction that defendant need only establish evidence sufficient to raise reasonable doubt, since such instruction would not conform to statutory provision relative to acquittal in case of reasonable doubt (Pen. Code, § 1096).

4. Jury ⇨72(1/2)—Though some of talesmen present were examined during morning, it was not error to allow names of others to be put in box in afternoon and to deny new panel.

Where some of talesmen were examined during morning session, and at afternoon session others who were on panel came forward, it was not error to permit their names to be put in box and to deny motion of defendant's attorney that new panel be drawn, because defense was using ten peremptory challenges without the full panel.

5. Criminal law ⇨778(5)—Instruction that defendant need only establish evidence sufficient to raise reasonable doubt of guilt held properly rejected (Pen. Code, § 1096).

Instruction in criminal prosecution that it was only necessary for the defendant to establish evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to the truth of the charge in the information held properly rejected because not complying with Pen. Code, § 1096, relative to presumption of innocence and acquittal in case of reasonable doubt.

6. Criminal law ⇨814(3)—Refusal of instruction that law applicable to photographs followed that applicable to finger prints was not error, where there was no evidence as to finger prints.

In criminal prosecution, refusal of instruction that law applicable to photographs was the same as that applicable to finger prints held not error, where there was no evidence introduced on the subject of finger prints, and the law applicable thereto had not been stated in any instruction.

7. Criminal law ⇨823(10)—Instruction relative to testimony offered held not erroneous, in view of entire charge, as authorizing jury to consider testimony not admitted.

Use of expression "testimony offered" in instruction as to powers of jury in weighing evidence and drawing conclusions held not erroneous, in view of entire charge as authorizing jury to consider testimony offered but not admitted.

8. Criminal law ⇨1172(2)—Where case did not rest on circumstantial evidence, error, if any, in instruction on that subject, was harmless.

Error in instruction on circumstantial evidence, if any, was not prejudicial, where case did not rest on circumstantial evidence.

9. Criminal law ⇨429(2)—Where there was other evidence showing identity, variation in spelling of defendant's name did not prevent admission of judgment of conviction.

Variation of spelling of defendant's name in certified copy of judgment of conviction did not prevent trial court from admitting the certified copy in evidence, where there was other evidence introduced which showed identity of person.

10. Criminal law ⇨730(15)—Defendant held not prejudiced by district attorney's calling defendant's attorney liar, where court reprimanded district attorney and instructed jury to disregard statement.

District attorney's misconduct in calling defendant's attorney a liar in open court held not to amount to prejudicial error, where court reprimanded district attorney and instructed jury to disregard the statement.

11. Criminal law ⇨977(3)—Where trial on insanity was postponed, judgment need not be entered within five days after verdict on trial of not guilty plea (Pen. Code, § 1191).

Where defendant entered plea of not guilty, and another plea of not guilty because of insanity, and trial on issue of sanity was postponed, it was not error to delay entry of judgment beyond five days after verdict, on not guilty plea, within which time judgment must ordinarily be entered under Pen. Code, § 1191.

12. Criminal law ⇨1130(5)—Reviewing court need not consider points raised, where defendant's brief fails to designate clearly rulings complained of or show why erroneous or cite authorities.

Where defendant's brief fails to point out clearly or concisely rulings complained of and reasons why they were erroneous or to refer to authorities, court is not called on to consider the points raised on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

George W. Tibbetts was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The defendant was convicted of violating section 288 of the Penal Code. He made a motion for a new trial, his motion was denied, and from the judgment of conviction and the order denying a new trial he has appealed.

[1] 1. The defendant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. In making this contention he claims that the witnesses swore falsely as to some matters, and that some of the sworn statements were inherently improbable. For the purpose of this decision it may be conceded that both assertions are well founded. However, as to other matters it is equally clear that the prosecution introduced evidence which abundantly supported every allegation contained in the information.

[2] 2. It is claimed that the prosecutrix, a little girl eight years of age, should not have been allowed to testify. Code Civ. Proc., § 1880, subd. 2. The record discloses that the trial court carefully examined her as to her mental development, and the record does not show that the trial court erred in its determination that she was entitled to be sworn. The point is without merit. People v. Reyes, 194 Cal. 650, 651, 229 P. 947.

[3] 3. When the jury was being selected, the defendant's attorney asked each of several jurors this question: "Would you follow this instruction if the court should so instruct you, that it would only be necessary for the defendant to establish evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in your mind as to the truth of the charge in the information, upon which it would be your duty to return a verdict of not guilty?" (Italics ours.) The prosecution interposed an objection, the objection was sustained, and the defendant claims that the ruling was error. It was not. Pen. Code, § 1096.

[4] 4. The selecting of a jury commenced in the morning. Some of the talesmen present were examined during the morning session. At the afternoon session some other talesmen who were on the panel came forward, and their names were put in the box, and thereupon the attorney for the defendant inquired if those persons were members of the panel. He was advised that they were and the reason why their names were not in the box during the morning. Thereupon the attorney for the defendant requested that a new panel be drawn because the defense was using ten peremptory challenges without a full panel. The motion was denied. The attorney then made an objection to the names going into the box. The objection was overruled. He then asked the court to discharge the panel. The motion was denied. We see no error in any one of the rulings. The defendant cites no authorities and presents no argument showing that there was any error committed.

[5] 5. The defendant offered a proposed instruction worded the same as the question mentioned above in division 3. It was refused, and he claims the refusal was error. As we have pointed out above, it was not sound law. The court did not err in refusing to give it. A correct instruction on the same subject was given.

The defendant proposed an instruction on the subject of the effect of a variation between the spelling of the defendant's name, Tibbetts, and the spelling of the name in a judgment of a prior conviction, Tibbits. It was complex, argumentative, and did not correctly state the law. Moreover, it omitted material facts, and was not pertinent to the evidence introduced. The prosecution did not rely on any presumption, but called a witness who testified that this defendant is the same individual who was on trial in the former action in which the judgment of prior conviction was rendered.

[6] The defendant tendered an instruction to the effect that the law applicable to photographs was the same as that applicable to finger prints. There had been no evidence on the subject of finger prints, and the law applicable to finger prints had not been stated in any instruction. If the requested instruction had been given, it would not have helped the jury.

[7] The trial court gave an instruction as to the powers of the jury in weighing evidence and drawing conclusions. In the instruction it used the expression "testimony offered." The defendant asserts that the jury was told that it could consider testimony offered but not admitted. Nothing on the face of the instruction warrants that interpretation, and, when all of the instructions are read together, it is clear no error was committed.

[8] The trial court gave an instruction on circumstantial evidence. The defendant claims that the trial court used the word "should" when the proper word was "must." As the case did not rest on circumstantial evidence, it is clear that the error, if any, was not prejudicial.

[9] 6. It is claimed that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence a certified copy of the judgment of conviction of George Tibbits. As this defendant spells his name Tibbetts, it is claimed that the prior judgment was not against this defendant. However, as shown above, there was other evidence which showed identity of persons.

[10] 7. It is contended that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct. In this connection the defendant specifies that in open court the district attorney called the defendant's attorney a liar. The record shows that, when that statement was made, the court reprimanded the district attorney and instructed the jury to disregard the statement and "pay no attention to it whatever." Bearing this fact in mind, it does not appear that the rights of the defendant were prejudiced.

[11] 8. The defendant contends that the trial court erred in denying his motion for a new trial because judgment had not been pronounced in time. Pen. Code, § 1191. When the case went to trial, the defendant had of record three pleas: (1) Not guilty of the offense charged; (2) not guilty of the offense charged because he was insane at the time he is alleged to have committed the unlawful act; and (3) a denial that he had suffered said prior conviction. The trial was had on the first and third pleas. The verdict was returned May 2, 1929. After the jury was dismissed, the court ordered the cause set for trial, as to the issue of sanity, on May 13, 1929. On the latter date the defendant withdrew the plea of insanity. Thereupon he was arraigned for judgment. The defendant interposed a motion for a new trial. One of the grounds of the motion was that judgment was not pronounced against him within five days after the verdict. Under the facts stated the trial court did not err in denying the motion. People v. Leong Fook (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 779.

[12] 9. The defendant's brief specifies forty errors, and the defendant claims that there are many more. We have treated every point that was properly presented, and have treated some that were not properly presented. Some of the assignments contain from two to fifteen alleged errors. All of the assignments not treated were improperly presented. The defendant did not point out clearly or concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous and the reasons why they were erroneous, nor refer to authorities supporting him. Under these circumstances the court is not called upon to consider the points. People v. Morales, 77 Cal. App. 483, 486, 487, 247 P. 221.

We find no error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

MOORE v. STEEN et al. (Civ. 39.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 23, 1929.

1. Trial ⇨163—Motion for nonsuit, not pointing out precise grounds on which made, is insufficient.

Motion for nonsuit must point attention of court and counsel to precise grounds upon which made, and general statement that there is no evidence justifying court granting any relief to plaintiff, or that plaintiff has failed to prove sufficient case, is insufficient.

2. Trial ⇨163—It is error to grant nonsuit on motion merely stating that there is no evidence justifying relief to plaintiff.

It is error to grant motion for nonsuit on general ground that there is no evidence justifying any relief to plaintiff.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(6)—Res ipsa loquitur rule held applicable to injury by X-ray burns which could possibly be caused only by negligence of defendant or latent defects not subject to operator's control.

In an action for injuries from X-ray burns, where the evidence showed the only possible causes for the burns could be negligent and dangerous excess of electric current permitted to go through machine or latent defects in apparatus or dispersion of secondary ray not subject to operator's control, the apparatus having long been in possession and use of defendant, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was properly applicable.

4. Negligence ⇨121(2)—“Res ipsa loquitur rule” is that, when thing causing injury which ordinarily would not occur, under proper management, is under defendant's exclusive control, injury is evidence of negligence.

The rule of “res ipsa loquitur” is that, when a thing which causes injury without fault of injured person is shown to be under the exclusive control of defendant, and injury is such as in ordinary course of things does not occur, if proper management is exercised, it affords reasonable evidence, in absence of explanation that injury arose from defendant's want of care.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Res Ipsa Loquitur.]

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(9)—Judgment of nonsuit in action for X-ray burns held erroneous, in view of res ipsa loquitur doctrine and evidence negating latent defect in apparatus.

In action for injuries by X-ray burns, evidence that injuries to plaintiff could not be attributed to latent and undiscovered defects in apparatus, but was caused by negligence of defendant, together with application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, held to render judgment of nonsuit erroneous.

6. Appeal and error ⇨927(3)—In reviewing judgment of nonsuit at close of plaintiff's testimony, every reasonable inference must be resolved in favor of plaintiff.

On reviewing judgment of nonsuit at close of plaintiff's evidence, testimony must be construed as strongly as possible in favor of plaintiff, and every reasonable inference resolved for him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Action by Joe Moore against Claude E. Steen and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Harvey & Harvey and W. F. Menton, all of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

SLOANE, P. J. This appeal was taken to the Supreme Court from a judgment of nonsuit and afterwards transferred to the Fourth District Court of Appeal for decision.

The action is for damages sustained by plaintiff through an injury to his body alleged to have been inflicted upon him by the defendants, their agents and employees, in negligently, carelessly, and unskillfully exposing him to the X-ray for the purposes of diagnosis, and while the relation of physician and patient existed between plaintiff and defendants. The cause was tried before a jury, and, at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, defendants moved for a nonsuit, which motion was granted, and from which judgment of nonsuit the plaintiff has taken this appeal.

The motion for nonsuit, as appears in the record, is as follows: "If the court please at this time the defendants and each of the defendants move the court for a judgment of nonsuit under the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury; and on the further ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury as to any of the defendants; on the further ground that plaintiff has failed to prove the material allegations of his complaint as to all or any of the defendants; and on the further ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient case to sustain any verdict in his favor by the jury against these defendants or against any one of the defendants."

Appellant first attacks the ruling and judgment of the court on motion for nonsuit, on the ground that the motion does not specify the precise grounds upon which it is made.

[1, 2] It is the settled law in this state that a motion for nonsuit must point the attention of the court and counsel to the precise grounds upon which it is made, and it is not sufficient to state generally that there is no evidence before the court justifying it granting any relief to the plaintiff or that plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient case. The motion should show wherein the plaintiff failed to prove its case. 9 Cal. Jur. p. 48, § 33, and authorities cited. It will be observed that the allegations of insufficiency of the proof, although repeated in various terms, amount simply to the general allegation of an insufficiency of the evidence to support a judgment, and fail to point out as to what particular issue in the case the evidence is insufficient.

It is error to grant a motion for a nonsuit where the grounds therefor are not stated. The reason for this rule is stated in Christensen Lumber Co. v. Buckley, 17 Cal. App. 37, 43, 118 P. 466, 468, as follows: "The reason for the rule requiring the grounds of a motion for a nonsuit to be stated is to afford the plaintiff an opportunity to correct any defects of pleading or proof which admit of correction."

If there was any failure of proof in the present case to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff, it was as to the matter of establishing that the injury sustained by plaintiff was due to negligence on the part of defendants. If this particular ground of omission had been pointed out, particularly as to the respect in which the evidence was insufficient, the plaintiff might have been able to supplement his evidence in a manner to meet the alleged insufficiency.

Passing this point for the present, and considering the motion on its merits, the question arises whether there was such an absence of proof of negligence in administering the X-ray test as to justify withholding the case from the jury and granting a judgment of nonsuit.

There is no question, under the proof submitted, but that the defendants, as physicians and surgeons, were in the employment of plaintiff to diagnose his case and ascertain what was ailing him, that in doing so, they resorted to these X-ray tests, and that, by reason of exposure to the X-ray, the plaintiff suffered a third degree burn, which developed into an ulcerated sore, causing plaintiff intense suffering and incapacitating him for a long period of time to follow his regular employment. The only element of proof necessary to recovery by the plaintiff, which is subject to a question as to its sufficiency, is evidence that the injury sustained was owing to negligence on the part of defendants.

Unless the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to this case, it must be admitted that the evidence of negligence is extremely meager, and depends upon a process of elimination.

There were three possible causes for the injurious effects of the X-ray upon the plaintiff developed by the testimony of the medical experts who testified. First, negligent and dangerous excess of electric current permitted to go through the X-ray machine. Second, hypersensitiveness of the patient to such electric exposure, unknown to the defendants. Third, latent defects in the X-ray machine and apparatus, or dispersion of secondary rays in the operation, which latter, it seems, is not subject to the control of the operator. It was shown in evidence that the patient was not hypersensitive, which leaves the two alternatives, either that the X-ray was negligently operated, or the burns were caused by some conditions in the operation due to latent and undiscovered defects in the machinery, or to a dispersion in an unusual manner of the electric current, from causes unknown to, and beyond the control of, the defendants.

[3] One of the defendants testified that this X-ray machine was one which had been in their use and possession for a considerable time, and it seems extremely improbable that the injuries to the plaintiff resulting from its use were occasioned by defects in the apparatus or in its dispersing the electric current in a manner which had not previously been manifested in the operation of this X-ray appliance. If we could deal in probabilities, they would preponderate largely towards the conclusion that the injury to plaintiff was caused by an excessive and unusual application of the electric current, either as to time or quantity, through the fault of the operation.

Arguing on this point, counsel for respondent says: "Assuming that the question of hypersensitivity is removed in the case at bar, the other possible causes of the burn testified to by plaintiff's experts, namely, hidden defects in the X-ray machine or in the milliammeter or the secondary rays, were not removed by any testimony or evidence whatever. The reasoning of the decisions referred to by appellant, and admitted by him to be good reasoning on page 14 of his opening brief, still remains, namely, that where the evidence shows the burn could have resulted from two or more possible causes, then the result alone does not prove what was the cause of the burn."

We doubt if the burden of eliminating this last possible explanation of plaintiff's injuries to relieve defendants from liability can, under the circumstances of this case, be thrown on the plaintiff. Here is an apparatus which had been long in the possession and use of the defendants, and which, if it possessed latent defects, its power for evil would naturally have developed before the treatment of plaintiff, an apparatus of which the plaintiff could have no possible previous knowledge or means of determining its secret and undisclosed possibilities. It would seem no more than reasonable that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should apply at least to throwing the burden of proof on the defendants to show the existence of some condition of this X-ray apparatus that was beyond their knowledge or control, as relieving them from the implication of negligence in its operation.

As stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Chipman, P. J., in Koskela v. Albion Lumber Co., 25 Cal. App. 12, 26, 142 P. 851, 856, where a workman was injured by the giving way of an appliance known as a "Traveller," by which the plaintiff was being transferred in the customary manner from the shore to the vessel on which he was employed: "It is difficult to conceive of appliances that had during the day carried safely many loads of two or three tons weight suddenly, without fault of the operators or of the appliances themselves, breaking down under a load of 300 pounds. If the accident was susceptible of an explanation consistent with the assumption that the appliances were adequate and their operation by defendants without fault, the burden was upon defendants so to show to the satisfaction of the jury."

The defendants claim they had no knowledge of any defects in the appliances which it is alleged had been carefully inspected prior to their use, and that the "accident was a casualty which no act of the defendants could have foreseen or prevented, and was caused through the breaking of a metal device of the loading apparatus, through a latent, unknown and undiscoverable defect in the metal thereof." There would seem to be the same reason here for throwing the burden upon the defendants to establish any defense of a latent and unknown defect in the structure or operation of the appliances used for this X-ray operation.

As to the general application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to the use of the X-ray, it seems to be a matter of agreement between both parties that the weight of authority in recent decisions in other jurisdictions is against it, and it is conceded that ordinarily this doctrine cannot be applied in cases of alleged malpractice of physicians and surgeons in the treatment of disease.

The doctrine as laid down by Judge Taft in Ewing v. Goode (C. C.) 78 F. 442, 443, in the following language, is undisputed: "Before the plaintiff can recover, she must show by affirmative evidence—first, that defendant was unskillful or negligent; and, second, that his want of skill or care caused injury to the plaintiff. If either element is lacking in her proof, she has presented no case for the consideration of the jury. * * * A physician is not a warrantor of cures. If the maxim, 'Res ipsa loquitur,' were applicable to a case like this, and a failure to cure were held to be evidence, however slight, of negligence on the part of the physician or surgeon causing the bad result, few would be courageous enough to practice the healing art, for they would have to assume financial liability for nearly all the 'ills that flesh is heir to.'"

It may be noted, however, that this is not a case claiming damages for malpractice in the treatment of disease, but for negligence in the process of a diagnosis to ascertain the cause of plaintiff's ill health. This distinction in the application of the rule under consideration seems to be recognized in the decisions.

There is a reason in the interests of the service of the public, as pointed out in the quotation from Judge Taft's opinion, why a distinction might be made between the diagnosis of a case and the treatment of the disease for curative purposes.

[4] The accepted rule of res ipsa loquitur is stated as follows: "When a thing which caused the injury, without fault of the injured person, is shown to be under the exclusive control of the defendant, and the injury is such as in the ordinary course of things does not occur, if the one having such control uses proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation, that the injury arose from the defendant's want of care. (Koskela v. Albion Lumber Co., 25 Cal. App. 12, 142 P. 851; San Juan Light & Transit Co. v. Requena, 224 U. S. 89, 32 S. Ct. 399, 56 L. Ed. 680; Hill v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 22 Cal. App. 788, 136 P. 492.)"

The conditions of the instant case come well within the terms of this rule, unless excluded by the doctrine exempting physicians in the treatment of disease.

The only California decision cited by either party bearing on the situation here is one cited by appellant in the oral argument on this appeal, in which case the opinion was rendered in March, 1929, long after the judgment of nonsuit in this case.

This decision, Ragin v. Zimmerman (Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 107, 108, is an X-ray damage case, and has many points in common with the instant case, and, while the court holds the evidence of negligence sufficiently proved by plaintiff, it declares that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur might properly be applied.

The plaintiff was subjected to an X-ray process in a dentist's office for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the patient's chin and jaw, and the "alveolar process and other related parts of the dentigerous anatomy." The operation resulted in electric burns, shock, and physical and mental pain, inflicted upon the patient by the alleged negligent and careless operation of the X-ray. The trial of the case resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff. The evidence disclosed that the plaintiff was badly burned in the operation, at several places about her face, limbs, and body. The immediate cause of the burning was attributed under the evidence to bringing the apparatus so close to the patient's knees that she received a severe shock, which caused her to involuntarily change her position so as to occasion the several burns which resulted in her serious injury. The question to be determined was whether or not the shock causing her involuntary movement was the result of negligence on the part of the operator. In the course of the opinion the court says:

"Appellant has devoted a great part of his argument to combating the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to malpractice cases. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the court decided the case by the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur or was influenced by that doctrine in rendering its decision. The trial court simply held, and there was evidence in the record to sustain its finding, that the operator of the X-ray machine so 'carelessly, negligently and unskillfully conducted herself in performing the operation of taking the said X-ray picture that she caused the plaintiff to become violently electrified, shocked. * * *' Appellant, upon examining respondent's teeth, placed her in charge of the young lady who operated the X-ray machine, with directions that a radiograph be taken. She was then conducted by the operator to the X-ray machine room and placed in a recumbent position for the taking of the radiograph. The operator's version of what followed is that she instructed respondent to remain very quiet and forewarned her against becoming alarmed at the slight clicking noise which she would hear as soon as the X-ray mechanism was set in motion, and as she pulled the second switch respondent raised her knee so that it either came in contact with or was brought into very close proximity to the X-ray tube, which carries a high voltage of electric current, and that she next observed an electric spark flash from the lower part of the tube toward respondent's knee. Respondent then leaned forward and in an attempt to extricate herself from her peril wrapped herself around the tube, which extended at slight elevation over the body from the extremities to her face. It is admitted that when bodies are brought within certain given distances of said tubes electric sparks are arced, or jump from said tubes and produce burns and cause damage to bodies into which they are inducted. The operator admitted that she placed said highly charged electric tube not more than ten inches above the knees of respondent as she arranged her in the chair for the purpose of taking the picture.

"Respondent, who had no technical knowledge as to the operation or mechanism of an X-ray machine, denied that the operator cautioned her against raising her knees or forewarned her as to the slight clicking noise that would be produced upon turning the switch, and positively denied that she raised her knee or otherwise changed her position before she was shocked and burned by the electric flashes. A piece of her dress, which would rest normally upon her knee, was burned. Besides, she received burns on the left side of her face, chest, certain fingers of both hands and on the thigh. The primary cause of the burns and shock is more consistently explicable on the theory that the electric sparks were arced from the tube to the face or upper portion of the body, thereby causing the respondent, either in pain or in fright, to move her lower limbs in an attempt to throw the tube a safe distance from her body or to carry herself from the zone of danger, than on the theory that the slight clicking sound, against which appellant claims respondent had been cautioned, so terrified her that she voluntarily elevated her knee to the extent of ten inches, thus bringing it in contact or near contact with the high voltage electric appliance. The claim of appellant that the first electric current to enter respondent's body was caused by her raising her knees approximately ten inches upon becoming startled at the slight clicking sound which followed the turning of the switch is not, in the light of the situation, consistent with human conduct and the trial court, no doubt, rejected appellant's version and gave credence to the respondent's account of her conduct up to the time that she received the first electric shock. If it be conceded, in the absence of any evidence sustaining such a concession, that the knee burn was the first received by respondent, that circumstance would not be sufficient to exculpate appellant of negligence. There is ground sufficient for holding that the tube was brought by the operator even closer to respondent's knee than she admitted bringing it. * * *

It therefore follows that the electric burns which respondent received were the result of defendant's negligence.

"Appellant has cited a number of cases to the effect that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to malpractice cases brought against physicians, surgeons and dentists for errors of judgment committed in the treatment of disease. Such cases have no application whatsoever to the facts of the instant case. Appellant here was not engaged in employing an X-ray as a treatment for disease. * * * His contention now is that the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, as applied to physicians, should be extended to include X-ray operators. We are satisfied that the negligence of appellant, as found by the trial court, is supported by the case as presented, and recourse to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not necessary. If it were necessary, however, to invoke it, we would not hesitate to apply it to the facts described by the evidence in the instant case. See discussion of application of rule to electrical devices, 10 Cal. Jur. 199, 200. It may well be said here, as was said in Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Texas Holding Co., 81 Cal. App. 61, 252 P. 1082, in applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to the facts of a case not so typically illustrative of the reason of the rule as the instant case:

"We think this doctrine may be urged with more than plausibility. Everything in the present case which in any way contributed to the accident was under the management of the defendant; * * * and that in the ordinary course of things the accident would not have happened if those having the management had used proper care." * * *

"In Evans v. Clapp (Mo. App.) 231 S. W. 79, the doctrine was applied in an action to recover for the negligent use of X-ray machines in taking radiographs, in the following language:

"It is manifest * * * that it cannot be said the jury could not reasonably find that plaintiff received an X-ray burn at the hands of the defendants, and that it was negligently administered. It is a dangerous agency, exceedingly capable of producing serious injury unless administered with care and caution. State v. Lester, 127 Minn. 282, 149 N. W. 297, L. R. A. 1915D, 201. As hereinbefore stated, the X-ray was not applied in this case for purposes of treatment, but merely to ascertain the cause of plaintiff's headaches, and this was disclosed at the first examination. There is no room, therefore, for the application of any theory of mere honest mistake in the careful application of a treatment intended to be applied in the accomplishment of a result similar to the one produced but not to the extent thereof.

"On the contrary, the X-ray was to be used only to discover a condition which was at once shown, and the many other exposures were not made in the interest of the patient but for other purposes. Examinations, when carefully and properly made, do not produce burns; hence when a burn is produced, this fact is of itself some evidence from which the jury may find that the degree of care and skill ordinarily exercised by persons of like profession and using such agencies was not exercised in that particular case. (Citing authorities.) Of course the rules governing the duty and liability of physicians and surgeons in the performance of professional services are applicable to them in the use and manipulation of an X-ray machine. 21 R. C. L. 386." Holt

v. Ten Broeck, 134 Minn. 458, 159 N. W. 1073, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 256, and cases therein cited, hold to the same effect."

[5] Following the conclusions of the Supreme Court in the foregoing case, we are of the opinion that there was some affirmative evidence on the trial of the instant case tending to support a finding that the injuries to plaintiff could not be attributed to latent and undiscovered defects in the X-ray apparatus, but was caused by the negligence of defendants, and that, in any event, this case is one for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

[6] This being a judgment of nonsuit, on defendants' motion at the close of plaintiff's evidence, without any rebutting evidence being introduced by the defendants, the testimony must be construed as strongly as possible, and every reasonable inference therefrom resolved in favor of the plaintiff.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by L. F. Ingledue against L. Davidson and others. From a judgment for defendant Davidson on a directed verdict, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. T. Morrow and Hyams & Himrod, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. Appellant brought this action to recover damages for injuries sustained by him from an explosion of gas. From a judgment rendered in favor of respondent upon a directed verdict he has appealed.

It appears from the evidence that on the 6th day of May, 1922, appellant went to respondent's restaurant about noon for a lunch. He had made his order and was sitting on a stool at the lunch counter, facing a large mirror that was attached to and rested against the wall some 6 feet in front of and to the west of him. This mirror was from 25 to 30 feet long and about 6 feet wide, and rested upon a shelf, the bottom of the mirror being about 6 inches higher than the lunch counter; the space between the shelf and the lunch counter being used by the waiters in passing back and forth while waiting upon the lunch counter customers. Immediately south of the south edge of said mirror, and 12 or 14 inches therefrom, was a coffee urn, which was heated by a small gas jet. Shortly after appellant had taken his seat at the lunch counter, and while waiting for his order to be filled, a small flame, several inches wide and a few inches high, shot up from the south edge of the mirror, which increased in size until it was 6 or 8 inches high. A passing waiter struck at it with a cloth or with his hand, and, this having no effect upon it, he started to get some water to pour on it. Just then an explosion took place, that forced the mirror from its place, and it fell forward on the lunch counter. Appellant was thrown from his seat on the stool to the floor, and suffered injuries that sent him to the hospital, and that confined him to his bed for several weeks, and compelled him to expend sums for physician's, nurse's, hospital, and other bills created by said injuries.

It appears that immediately behind the mirror, and concealed from observation by it, was a gas pipe, one-half inch in diameter, that was not being used for any of the purposes of the restaurant at the time of the explosion. This pipe was 8 or 10 feet long, and had an ell at the upper end that extended toward the back of the mirror. The lower end connected with the main in the basement, that furnished gas to the restaurant, and it had no cut-off that would prevent the flow of gas into it when gas was turned on for the use of the restaurant. The upper end of this unused gas pipe extended from 4 to 6 inches above the level of the shelf upon which the mirror rested, and this pipe was between the mirror and a brick wall, but not imbedded in the wall.

Respondent knew of the existence of this pipe, at least to the extent of knowing that it connected with the main house pipe in the basement, although it is not shown that he knew that it extended up to the point behind the mirror. Immediately after the explosion, a flame several inches high was seen coming from this unused pipe, and this flame continued to burn until the gas was cut off from the restaurant.

It appears from the evidence that the gas which caused the explosion came from this unused pipe, which was either not plugged, or so insecurely plugged that it permitted gas to escape from it. There was a brick wall behind the mirror, and behind this pipe, which had pockets in it, were places where brick had been left out, or from which they had been removed, and these pockets apparently had become filled, or partly filled, with this leaking gas, and some of this gas found its way along and outside of the edge of the mirror and became ignited, and this ignition was communicated to the gas in the pockets, and thereupon the explosion ensued.

Respondent had occupied the premises in which he was conducting the restaurant since December 20, 1920, and at the time of the explosion was occupying said premises as lessee under a lease which provided that he should keep the leased premises in good order and condition at his own expense. The unused pipe had been placed in said leased premises before the occupancy thereof by appellant, and prior to the explosion had not been used by him.

Respondent testified that his weekly gas bills from the first of the year until the week ending March 20th of that year ran from $36.20 to $39.92; that for the week ending on March 20th the bill was $42.12, and thereafter his weekly gas bills increased until on May 1st it was $45.90. He also testified that the defendant the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation was furnishing the gas for his restaurant; that during the latter part of March he complained to the gas company regarding the increase in his gas bills, and was requested to file a complaint; that in April, 1922, he called at the office of the gas company and stated to its employee he found there that he was having the highest gas bills he ever paid; that he didn't see any reason why this should be the case; that he did not know what was the matter; that said employee suggested that there might be water in the meter; that the next day an employee of the gas company came to the restaurant and changed the meter.

The gas bill, after the meter was changed, was still more, that on Tuesday or Wednesday before the following Saturday, the day upon which the explosion took place, respondent again called at the office of the gas company, and said to the employee in charge of the office, "I know there is something wrong there somewhere, and I wish you would send some one down and find out what it is." On Thursday preceding the explosion, two employees of the gas company came to the restaurant and started to take the meter out. Respondent told them to wait until he called up the office of the gas company. He then stated to the employee who answered on the telephone that he did not want another meter, but wanted some one to come down and investigate the matter. The employee asked him if he did not want the meter, and, when respondent informed him that he did not want it, the employee said something that sounded to respondent like an invitation to betake himself into the realms of Pluto.

Appellant produced as a witness Harry J. Griffin, captain of the fire department of Los Angeles, who testified that he went to the place of the explosion, that when he arrived there he saw the mirror lying on the lunch counter, and a flame coming from the gas pipe that stood behind where the mirror had been; that he immediately had the gas that supplied the restaurant shut off; that he saw respondent there, and asked him what he thought caused the explosion; and that respondent replied that he had been smelling gas around there for four or five days, and had been trying to get it fixed.

[1] Appellant was an invitee on the premises of respondent at the time of the explosion. The owner or occupier of a building must exercise ordinary care to render the premises reasonably safe to persons whom he induces to come thereon by invitation, express or implied. Thompson on the Law of Negligence, p. 146. And, as such invitee, respondent owed appellant the duty of maintaining the property in a safe condition and of exercising reasonable care in protecting him from injury. Madigan v. O. H. Hale & Co., 90 Cal. App. 151, 265 P. 574; Goldstein v. Healy, 187 Cal. 206, 201 P. 462; Giannini v. Campodoni Co., 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80; Oles v. Kahn Bros., 81 Cal. App. 76, 253 P. 158.

[2] There was evidence on the part of plaintiff that for some time before the explosion respondent knew that something was wrong with the gas that was being furnished to his restaurant; that for some unaccountable reason his gas bills were increasing. He had the meter changed, and still the increase continued. As a cause for the explosion he stated to the captain of the fire department that he had smelled gas for four or five days prior to its occurrence. He did not have his gas pipes examined, to ascertain from what source the smell of gas came, though he must have known that this continuing odor of gas indicated a leakage, but continued to have the gas turned on, though he must have realized that a continual leakage of gas would likely result in an explosion.

In the case of Perera v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exp., 179 Cal. 63, 175 P. 454, 455, the court said: "It is now settled that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, with regard to the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of a court to grant a nonsuit, and also that a court may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff." See, also, Burgesser v. Bullock's, 190 Cal. 673, 214 P. 649; McCarthy v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 82 Cal. App. 503, 255 P. 868.

And in this last-named case, the court said that the rule as to directed verdicts is not that a verdict may be directed whenever the evidence is such that upon motion the court would grant a new trial, for a court may grant a new trial, even when there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict, if it believes the evidence preponderates against the verdict, but applies only where the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the verdict, and where upon the whole evidence the court, of its own motion, would be compelled to set the verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence. From the foregoing facts the jury could have been warranted in the belief and inference that, prior to the explosion, the respondent was put upon notice that there was a leakage in his gas pipe or pipes, and that his failure to cause an examination of his gas pipes, and the stoppage of such leak, and the continued use of the gas in his restaurant while such condition existed, were the proximate causes of the explosion. We are of the opinion that the evidence tending to prove that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the respondent was sufficiently substantial to require the submission of the case to the jury.

[3] Appellant claims that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the facts of this case. In his complaint he does not plead negligence in general terms, but sets out the specific acts of respondent upon which he bases his allegations of negligence. By so doing, he has barred himself from relying upon this principle of the law. The general rule is that where the plaintiff in his complaint gives the explanation of the cause of the action, that is to say, where the plaintiff, instead of relying upon a general allegation of negligence, sets out specifically the negligent acts or omissions complained of, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply. Connor v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 26 A. L. R. 1462; Marovich v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595.

The judgment is reversed.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. Respondent is one of the defendants in the case of L. F. Ingledue, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. L. Davidson, Doing Business under the Fictitious Name and Style of Pulman Lunch, Defendant and Respondent, D. W. Edelman et al., Defendants, in which a decision was this day rendered. 93 Cal. App. —, 283 P. 837. At the close of plaintiff's evidence in that case, the trial court granted a motion for nonsuit in respondent's favor. From this action of the court, plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The facts applying to this case are set forth in the aforesaid decision. It appears from these facts that at no time prior to the explosion had this respondent received any notice that there was any leakage of gas from any of the gas pipes on the premises of defendant Davidson, nor information sufficient to put respondent upon notice that such leakage existed.

[2] Nor can the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur be invoked against this respondent, for the reason set forth in said decision, and for the additional reason that the pipe, the leaking from which caused the explosion, was a part of the house piping of the said Davidson restaurant, and not under the actual control of this respondent.

The trial court did not err in granting the motion for nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

Failure to make finding on material issue presented by pleadings constitutes prejudicial error, entitling complaining suitor to reversal, only where it appears from record that there was evidence introduced sufficient to sustain finding in favor of such party.

2. Appeal and error ⚡901—Appellant complaining of failure to make finding on material issue has burden to show finding was required by evidence.

Appellant complaining of trial court's failure to make finding on material issue presented by pleadings has burden to cause record to show that such finding was required by evidence, since error is not presumed.

4. Appeal and error ⚡907(2)—Presumption exists on appeal that evidence was legally sufficient to sustain finding, where evidence was not brought up in record.

Where plaintiff appealing from judgment in action for conversion of automobile did not bring up evidence, presumption exists that testimony adduced was legally sufficient to sustain finding that plaintiff's right of action was barred by laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by R. G. Moore against John Rogers and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Steele, of Oakland, for appellant.

Joseph J. Bullock, of Redwood City, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action for the alleged conversion of plaintiff's automobile, the ground of appeal being that the trial court failed to find on a material issue raised by the pleadings.

The complaint alleged that the defendant Roach was the constable of the third judicial township of San Mateo county; that on February 15, 1926, pursuant to a writ of attachment duly issued out of the justice's court in an action brought against plaintiff by the defendant Carli, Roach seized said automobile and retained possession thereof "until on or about the 20th day of September, 1926, when he converted said automobile to the use and benefit of himself and of said defendants John Rogers and Frank Carli, who ever since said time and still continue to hold and retain said automobile as their own." The complaint further alleged that plaintiff demanded the return of said automobile, but that such demand was refused, and that by reason of the alleged conversion he has suffered damage in the sum of $700.

The answer consisted of a general denial, verification being waived. The action was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and the judgment in favor of defendants was based upon the following findings: That prior to February 13, 1926, while plaintiff was the owner of said automobile, the defendants Rogers and Carli performed work thereon and furnished materials therefor; that on said date Carli sued plaintiff in the justice's court of the third township "for the work, labor, and material rendered and performed in the repair of said automobile, and on or about the 13th day of February, 1926, the defendant Roach placed said automobile in the garage of Rice and Hinton for storage with the full knowledge of plaintiff"; that the automobile remained there until August 30, 1926, at which time Rice and Hinton caused it to be sold pursuant to section 3051 and 3052 of the Civil Code for the storage due thereon. It was further found that plaintiff had full knowledge of all of the foregoing proceedings, but took no action in the matter until January, 1927, when he demanded the return of the automobile, and that thereafter and in April, 1927, he commenced this action for conversion. And in connection with such delay the court also found that plaintiff's right to said automobile, if any he had, was lost by his laches.

As will be noted, the trial court made no finding upon the allegations of the complaint relating to the seizure of said automobile by Roach, as constable, under attachment proceedings, and the specific point plaintiff makes in support of this appeal is that the omission to so find constituted reversible error, it being contended in this regard that if, as alleged, said automobile was attached, and while under attachment was sold for storage, the constable was liable for conversion under the law as stated in the case of Aigeltinger v. Whelan et al., 133 Cal. 110, 65 P. 125.

[1-3] Aside from the question of the application herein of the legal principle declared in that case, however, it has been repeatedly held that the failure to make a finding on a material issue presented by the pleadings results in prejudicial error entitling the complaining suitor to a reversal only where it appears from the record that there was evidence introduced as to such issue, and the evidence in that regard was sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of such party. And as error is not presumed, it is incumbent upon the appellant to cause the record to show that such finding was required by the evidence (see 2 Cal. Jur., pp. 1032, 1035, and cases therein cited). Here plaintiff did not bring up the evidence, the appeal having been taken upon the judgment roll alone; consequently, in the state of the record before us it is impossible to say whether any evidence was introduced at all to prove that the automobile was ever attached, or, if it was, whether the attachment was in force at the time of the sale for storage. And, furthermore, if any such evidence was introduced it cannot be determined from this record whether the same would have been legally sufficient to sustain a finding in plaintiff's favor. Manifestly, therefore, no error in the findings has been shown.

[4] It will be observed also that the court found that plaintiff's right of action herein was barred by laches. In any event, therefore, the judgment would not be subject to reversal, because, in the absence of evidence showing to the contrary, it must be presumed on appeal that the testimony adduced at the trial was legally sufficient to sustain the foregoing finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

PROVOST v. PROVOST et al. (Civ. 6244.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 27, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⇨299(1)—Judgment granting wife maintenance held erroneous in directing spouses each receive half income of community real estate, without ordering division of property or proceeds (Civ. Code, §§ 137, 146, 147).

Court, in the granting wife support and maintenance, erred in decreeing that each of spouses receive one-half of income derived from community real estate, without ordering equal division between spouses of property or proceeds under requirements of Civ. Code §§ 146, 147, relative to actions for divorce, which are adopted by section 137 and applied to actions for maintenance.

2. Husband and wife ⇨258—Community funds do not merge in husband's separate property improved with community funds without wife's consent.

Where husband has without wife's consent improved his own separate property with funds belonging to the community, community funds do not merge in his separate property.

3. Husband and wife ⇨258—Wife seeking maintenance had right to compensation measured by improvement in husband's separate property through application of community funds without wife's consent.

Where husband improved his separate property with community funds without wife's consent, wife in suit for maintenance had right to compensation in the amount of her share in the community measured by the improvement that such community property had effected in separate property of husband.

4. Husband and wife ⇨258—Wife's right to compensation for community funds applied in improving husband's separate property held not defeated by husband's conveyance to daughter without money consideration.

Right of wife suing for maintenance to compensation for husband's use of community funds without her consent in improving husband's separate property held not defeated by fact that husband had deeded his separate property so improved to his daughter, where such transaction was for fraudulent purpose of depriving wife of her right to separate maintenance and daughter parted with nothing of value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Suit by Maria Provost against Anthony Provost and another for maintenance and support and other relief. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

James H. Mitchell, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert Sidney Brown, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. Appellant Anthony Provost and the respondent Maria Provost intermarried on October 20, 1904, and lived together until January 8, 1925, when they separated. Prior to this marriage said appellant acquired a small parcel of real property of the value of about $300, described as lot 33, block 2, of subdivision No. 1 of Dolgeville, in the city of Alhambra, known and designated for the purposes of this case as the "Alhambra property." Thereafter the spouses improved the same with community funds, and enhanced its value to about $12,000. Following their marriage said parties acquired by their united efforts a parcel of real property which both alleged to be of the value of about $5,000, described as follows: The southwest quarter, section 21, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, the north half of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 28, township 5 north, range 12 west, San Bernardino base and meridian, in the county of Los Angeles. On August 26, 1924, Anthony Provost conveyed to appellant Edna L. Gomes, his daughter by a former marriage, all of his right, title, and interest in and to the Alhambra property together with the improvements thereon.

On April 1, 1925, the respondent commenced an action for maintenance and support, wherein she alleged that the conveyance from Provost to his daughter had been made without consideration, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, and for the purpose of defrauding and depriving her of maintenance and support from its income; that she was advanced in years, and had no income, funds, employment, or vocation, and was compelled to live for the greater part upon the charity of friends and relatives. Appellant Edna L. Gomes was made a party defendant, and the plaintiff prayed for possession of all furniture and furnishings of the Alhambra property as a home pending litigation, a division of the community property, and a lien thereon to the extent of one-half the value of all improvements, or, as an alternative, that she be awarded all of the community property. By supplemental complaint, desertion and willful neglect by defendant Provost to furnish the common necessities of life were alleged, and a dissolution of the bonds of matrimony demanded. The defendants answered jointly, admitting that the realty last herein mentioned, described as the "ranch property," was community, that it was of the value of $5,000, and that there were furniture, furnishings, and farm implements of a value of about $250. They alleged that the Alhambra property was at the time of conveyance wholly the separate property of Anthony Provost, and joined issue upon the other material allegations of the complaint. Defendant Provost by cross-complaint alleged cruelty and desertion upon the part of his wife, and also prayed that a decree of divorce be granted.

After a trial before the court without a jury, it was found that all of the allegations of grounds for divorce were untrue, and it was adjudged that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant Anthony Provost be granted a divorce. The findings of fact further recite that the Alhambra property was conveyed by Provost to his daughter for valuable consideration and without the plaintiff's knowledge; that it was the separate property of the husband and that he had a legal right to convey the same, but that Mrs. Gomes had given nothing of value therefor; that both of the spouses were entitled to their support from its income, and that they had no other means of support, but that said conveyance had been made for the purpose of depriving the plaintiff of her interest therein, and that Mrs. Gomes had collected all income therefrom since the date of conveyance. The trial court directed that each of the spouses receive one-half the income, if any, derived from the ranch property, or that, in the event of sale, the proceeds be equally divided between them; that Mrs. Gomes retain title to the Alhambra property, but that Anthony Provost receive the income therefrom and pay to the plaintiff $40 per month, the balance, if any, to be devoted to his own use; that, if said income be insufficient for the support and maintenance of both spouses, this property be sold under execution, and the proceeds applied in a manner best suited to their necessities. Liens in favor of the plaintiff and her husband were created and imposed thereon to secure the payment of said amounts.

The defendants appealed, and here contend that the Alhambra property was at all times separate, that Anthony Provost had a legal right to convey it, and conveyed the same for a valuable consideration, and that the trial court erred in imposing a lien thereon or directing that it be sold, as heretofore mentioned.

[1] Section 137 of the Civil Code provides that, in granting the husband or wife permanent support and maintenance, the court "shall make the same disposition of the community property * * * as would have been made if the marriage had been dissolved." Sections 146 and 147 of the same Code require, if a divorce be granted upon any ground other than of adultery or extreme cruelty, the community property shall be equally divided between the parties and that whenever necessary for that purpose the court may order a partition or sale, and a division or other disposition of the proceeds. Hence it clearly results that as to the ranch property the findings and judgment were erroneous, since no division thereof was directed to be made through partition or sale. D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 89 Cal. App. 86, 264 P. 497. In the case last cited it was held not error to award all of the community property to a wife who alleged extreme cruelty, and was given custody of a minor child, even though her pleadings did not allege the necessity for such award nor pray that it be granted. In the instant case it was conceded by the parties, and was found by the court, that this parcel was community property, and that the sole means of support of either spouse in the absence of its sale must be derived from the income produced by the Alhambra property, which the findings and judgment imply may become insufficient.

[2] A more serious problem is presented as to the legal status and propriety of the trial court's ruling as to the Alhambra realty and improvements placed upon a parcel of the husband's land by community endeavors.

That improvements made during the marriage on separate property of either husband or wife with community funds will as a general rule belong to the spouse owning the property is stated in 21 Cyc. 1648, and the language is quoted with approval in Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 440, 89 Am. Dec. 195. However, it is significant that in this and every other California case, except in Estate of Barreiro, 86 Cal. App. 764, 261 P. 509, where the principle has been applied, it has been a fact that the property improved by the expenditure of community money was realty belonging to the wife. In each such instance the husband exercising his legal authority has used funds of the community to annex valuable structures to the wife's separate property. In Shaw v. Bernal, 163 Cal. 262, 124 P. 1012, 1014, it is stated: "* * * But it is clearly the rule that where a husband deliberately constructs from community funds a building upon the separate property of his wife, in the absence of any sufficient agreement or undertaking to the contrary, as between him and her, the title to the building follows the title to the land and is separate property of the wife, and neither he nor the marital partnership has any title to any portion of the property, either land or building." Upon that phase of the decision the court concludes: "In view of what we have said as to the rule applicable where a husband voluntarily constructs with community funds buildings upon the separate property of the wife, there is nothing in the foregoing testimony to compel a conclusion that any part of the property here involved, land or improvements, was community property at the date of death of Mrs. Shaw."

In Smith v. Smith, 47 Cal. App. 650, 191 P. 60, 62, it is said: "The expenditure by a husband of either his separate funds or the community funds of himself and wife in improving his wife's separate property does not operate to change the title. As between them, in the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, the title to the improvements follows the land." And from Carlson v. Carlson, 10 Cal. App. 300, 101 P. 923, 925, we quote: "In the absence of any specific agreement, no lien would be created on account of money expended by a husband upon the separate property of the wife. Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 450, 89 Am. Dec. 195. The law will not infer from such expenditures alone an agreement either to change the character of the property or an intent to charge the same with a lien. It must rather be presumed that it was the intention of the husband to advance the money paid for the benefit of the wife's estate, and that it was intended to accrue to her interest. Flournoy v. Flournoy, 86 Cal. 294, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39, 24 P. 1012."

It is apparent that the reason back of each of these decisions stressed in the opinion on the subject, except in Estate of Barreiro, supra, which will be considered separately, is that a husband had authority to control the disposition of the community funds, and that he voluntarily annexed them to the separate property of the wife, who exercised no such power. From these facts the intention of the husband is presumed to have been that the improvements made with the community money should become a part of the separate property of the wife. To merely state a case where the facts are reversed and the husband has spent community funds in improving his own separate estate is to make manifest the palpable impropriety of applying these decided cases as precedents for holding that, simply because community property is annexed to the separate property of one of the spouses, the whole is thereby for all purposes the separate property of that spouse. Since the facts are reversed, logic compels the conclusion that the community funds do not merge in the separate property where the husband has, without consent of the wife, improved his own separate property with that belonging to the community. To hold otherwise would be to permit the authority of the husband in controlling the community property, given him in the interest of greater freedom in its use and for its transfer for the benefit of both himself and his wife, to become a weapon to be used by him to rob her of every vestige of interest in the community property with which the law has expressly invested her. Such a conclusion would violate every sense of justice, and outrage every principle of fair dealing, known to the law. The provisions of our Code do not require us to so hold, nor do the prior decisions of this jurisdiction compel or warrant a ruling which would thus uphold the marital marauding of the wife's estate. If it be true that, in order for the community property to remain such, there must be an agreement to that effect, where, under the direction of the husband, it is annexed to the separate property of the wife, then, where as in the instant case the husband has used his legal authority in the handling of the community funds to enhance the value of his own separate lands in order that it should become a part thereof, and be changed in its character to separate property, an agreement to that effect should be shown. Such consent cannot be presumed from the wife's mere silence, for the law has given her no right to say "No." It would be a novelty to hold that one who has no right to speak is presumed to have waived property rights by silence alone.

There is authority in other jurisdictions upholding the demands of justice in cases of this character and protecting the rights of the wife in community funds. In Sims v. Billington, 50 La. Ann. 968, 24 So. 637, it was held that, although buildings and improvements placed upon separate property of the husband during marriage and paid for with community funds belonged to the husband, the community has an interest therein which will be sustained, and the separate estate will be charged with the amount that such improvements have enhanced the value of the property. In Legg v. Legg, 34 Wash. 132, 75 P. 130, 132, it was said: "In equity and fairness to Malena Legg, as the survivor of the community, she should be reimbursed for betterments placed on the land by the community." A lien was there impressed upon the property for the amount allowed, but only to secure its payment to the widow after sale, which had been ordered by the trial court. And in Furh v. Winston, 66 Tex. 521, 1 S. W. 527, 529, it is said: "It is well settled that separate estate of one member of the community must reimburse the community for any proper improvements made in good faith upon the separate estate with community funds." Our Supreme Court long since recognized the universal application of these principles, and announced upon the authority of New York, Louisiana, and Texas decisions that the beneficent purposes of the statute cannot be frustrated by voluntary transfer by a husband for the purpose of defeating any rights which the wife may have. Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 216, 73 Am. Dec. 533; Estate of Barreiro, supra. Text-writers also have perceived that the common law and civil law authorities are in accord that, while no lien is imposed, yet compensation may be claimed, in the event of improvement of separate property by community investment. McKay on Community Property (2d Ed.) p. 659, § 1013; Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition (2d Ed.) § 138.

In Estate of Barreiro, supra, the opinion asserts: "We therefore have but one question to settle: Were the improvements presumptively community property?" This follows the statement: "We do not mean to say that a fund might not be traced through this medium to its destination, and the character of the property finally acquired be determined according to the facts, because such is not the case before us, but only that in the instant case no character is given to the property by proof other than that the land was separate property." And so it is evident that this authority makes no pretense of holding that, where it is an established fact that valuable improvements paid for with community funds have been placed upon the husband's separate property, the entire estate is to be held as his without compensation or redress of any character to the wife. Later in the same case it is said: "The authorities hold that the most that the marital partnership may acquire under such circumstances, if anything, is a right to reimbursement to the extent of the value added to the property by the improvements."

[3, 4] We conclude that, while the Alhambra property must be regarded as being the separate estate of the defendant Provost, the plaintiff through proper proceedings and pleadings has a right to compensation in the amount of her share in the community, measured by the improvement that such property has effected in his separate property. This situation is not affected by the fact that defendant Provost deeded the entire estate at Alhambra to his daughter, for it was expressly found that this transaction was for the fraudulent purpose of depriving the wife of her right to separate maintenance from her husband, and that the daughter gave nothing of value for the property transferred to her.

Other arguments are advanced and discussed in the briefs which we do not regard necessary to consider in this decision. The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein expressed. Of course, the trial court may in the ends of justice even permit an amendment to the pleadings before another trial is had, but the rights of the parties can and should be determined in this action. Judgment reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1039(4)—Failure of pedestrian to allege party having control of automobile was agent of owner held harmless, where case was tried on agency theory.

In pedestrian's action against owner of automobile for injuries received when struck by automobile under supervision of a servant, failure to allege that servant was agent of owner held harmless, where case was tried on theory of agency, and evidence thereon was adduced without objection on part of automobile owner.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1042(5)—Order striking automobile owner's defense that employee had no authority to allow stranger to operate automobile, if made, held harmless, where case was disposed of on employee's negligence.

In pedestrian's action for injuries received when struck by automobile under control of agent, order striking out owner's affirmative defense to effect that employee had not authority to procure aid of a stranger to operate automobile, if made, held harmless, where case was disposed of on theory of employee's negligence.

3. Automobiles ⇨244(6)—Evidence that employee allowed stranger to drive truck, and that driver turned into street at intersection without slackening speed, held to support finding of negligence (Civ. Code, § 1714).

In pedestrian's action for injuries received when struck by motortruck while crossing street in pedestrians' pathway, evidence that employee allowed stranger to drive truck at 25 miles an hour amid heavy traffic, and that driver suddenly turned into street at intersection without slackening speed, striking pedestrian, held to support finding of negligence, since employee made no protest against reckless manner of driving truck, and during emergency sat beside driver without stopping machine, for under Civ. Code, § 1714, liability for injuries may attach, not only for result of one's deliberate negligent acts, but also for failure to exercise due care.

4. Automobiles ⇨244(50)—Evidence held to show pedestrian struck by motortruck while crossing street, was free from contributory negligence.

Evidence that pedestrian, after looking to her right and left and seeing no danger, attempted to cross street in pedestrians' pathway, and, reaching car track in center of street, again looked both ways, continuing across street, and was struck by motortruck turning onto street at intersection, held to show that pedestrian was free from contributory negligence.

Master is not liable to third person for negligent acts of unauthorized stranger procured by employee to assist him, when services of stranger are performed out of presence and independent of employee, or when services are not within scope of servant's employment, or when assistance is secured contrary to direct instructions of master.

6. Automobiles §193(4)—Employer held liable to pedestrian, injured when struck by motor-truck being negligently driven by stranger under supervision of employee.

Where employee driving motortruck procured assistance of stranger, and permitted stranger to drive truck while employee sat beside him, employer held liable for injuries sustained by pedestrian, struck while crossing street in pedestrian's pathway by motortruck turning onto street at 25 miles per hour in heavy traffic, since a master is liable to third person for result of negligent acts of stranger, whose services are procured without master's authority by servant to assist him within scope of his employment, under his supervision and in his presence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Katherine Gibbons against D. Naritoka. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred E. Peterson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for injuries sustained by a pedestrian through the negligence of the driver of an automobile while the plaintiff was crossing a street. The chief problem is whether the owner of the machine may be held liable for the negligent operation of the automobile while it is being driven by a stranger without the owner's authority, but in the presence of the employee who is hired for that purpose.

The defendant, who lived in Los Angeles, was the owner of the automobile. Frank Takao was employed to drive the truck in conveying produce to market. He was not authorized to procure an assistant to operate the machine. While the agent was engaged in hauling celery to market in Los Angeles, trouble occurred with the engine. A negro, who was an entire stranger to him, but who chanced to be near by, voluntarily assisted in starting the engine. Takao then invited the negro to drive the truck, which he proceeded to do. The agent sat by his side on the front seat, smoking a cigarette. They drove up San Pablo street to Twelfth street. At this point the traffic was heavy. The machine was traveling 25 miles an hour. The brake was defective. The plaintiff was 42 years of age and reasonably intelligent and alert. After looking to her right and left, and seeing no danger, she attempted to cross Twelfth street in the pedestrians' pathway. Reaching the car track in the center of the street, she again looked both ways for vehicles and then continued on her way. Without warning and without slackening its speed, the truck suddenly turned from San Pedro street into Twelfth street and struck the plaintiff from behind, dragging her 35 or 40 feet before the machine was brought to a stop. The plaintiff was seriously injured. Upon trial, the plaintiff was awarded a judgment of $2,428, from which this appeal was perfected.

A reversal of the judgment is sought on the ground that (1) the employee was not authorized to procure an assistant to operate the machine, and that the doctrine of respondeat superior therefore does not apply; (2) the complaint failed to state a cause of action, for the reason that it omitted to allege the agency of the servant, or that the accident occurred in the due course of his employment; (3) the court erred in striking from the answer an affirmative defense to the effect that the accident occurred through the negligence of a stranger, who was then operating the machine without the knowledge or authority of the defendant; and (4) the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence.

It was stipulated that the defendant owned the machine; that Takao was employed by him to drive the truck; that the negro was procured to drive the automobile without the knowledge of the owner, and was engaged in operating it at the time of the accident; that the employee, Takao, sat by the driver's side on the front seat at that time; and that they were then occupied in the regular course of Takao's employment in returning the truck to the owner's place of business.

[1] The court adopted specific findings in accordance with the foregoing facts, upon all of these issues. The complaint failed to allege the employment or agency of Takao, the driver of the truck. This omission was due to the fact that at the time of the accident he gave his name as Naritoka, and it was assumed he was the owner of the machine. This omission was harmless, for the reason that the case was tried on the theory of the existence of this agency. This relationship was stipulated, and evidence of the fact was adduced without objection on the part of the defendant. The findings of the court also assumed that these were valid issues in the case. The defendant had the full benefit of this issue.

[2] The record on appeal does not show that the court struck out the affirmative defense to the effect that Takao, the employee, had no authority to procure the aid of the negro to operate the machine. Even though such an order was made, it is also harmless, in view of our disposition of the appeal on the theory that the negligence of the employee, Takao, proximately caused the accident, since the machine was, in effect, actually operated under the personal supervision and direction of the agent himself, and he failed to remonstrate against the negro's reckless driving of the machine, and did not attempt to regulate its speed.

[3, 4] There is ample evidence of negligence in the operation of the machine, and of plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. At the time of the accident the truck was traveling 25 miles an hour amid heavy traffic. The brake was defective. Without warning, it suddenly turned from San Pedro street into Twelfth street. Without slackening its speed, it struck the plaintiff from behind and dragged her 35 or 40 feet before it was brought to a stop. During this emergency the employee sat by the side of the negro driver, within reach of the wheel, the brake, and the apparatus by means of which he could have readily shut off the gas and stopped the machine. He made no protest against the reckless manner of operating the truck, and he made no effort to regulate its speed. He may be presumed to have known the brake was defective. Under such circumstances, the employee was himself guilty of negligence which may be imputed to the owner of the machine. This will render him liable for the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, on the doctrine of respondeat superior.

Liability for injuries sustained may attach, not only for the result of one's deliberate negligent acts, but also for his failure to exercise due care in the performance of his duty or in the management of his property. Negligence may consist of affirmative acts or careless omissions. Section 1714, Civ. Code. Mr. Justice Henshaw says in the case of Basler v. Sacramento Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 514, 518, 111 P. 530, 532, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642: "Negligence may be active or passive in character. It may consist in heedlessly doing an improper thing, or in heedlessly refraining from doing the proper thing. Whether the circumstances call for activity or passivity, one who does not do what he should is equally chargeable with negligence with him who does what he should not."

[5] The authorities are not in strict harmony as to the master's liability to third persons for the negligent acts of an unauthorized stranger procured by the employee to assist him within the scope of his employment. 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, note; 13 L.

R. A. (N. S.) 572, note; Decennial Digests, Master and Servant, ¶ 301 (2). Clearly the master is not liable when the services of a stranger are performed out of the presence and independent of the employee, or when the services are not within the scope of the servant's employment, or when the assistance is secured contrary to the direct instructions of the master. Emison v. Wylam Ice Cream Co., 215 Ala. 504, 111 So. 216; Butler v. Mec. Iron Foundry Co., 259 Mass. 560, 156 N. E. 720, 54 A. L. R. 849. Some cases go so far as to hold that the master is liable for such negligence only when there is either express or implied authority for the agent to procure assistance. 18 R. C. L. 785, § 245; 39 C. J. 1271, §§ 1458b-1459.

[6] The liability of the master has sometimes been denied upon the specific ground that the servant was not present at the time of the performance of the tortious acts complained of. Blumenfeld v. Meyer-Schmid Grocer Co., 206 Mo. App. 509, 230 S. W. 132. These cases, however, do not involve the principle of the co-operating negligence of an employee who is personally present with knowledge of the tortious acts of his assistant and possessing the ability to restrain or regulate such acts. By the weight of authority and in accordance with good reason, a master is liable to a third person for the results of the negligent acts of a stranger whose services are procured without the master's authority by the servant to assist him within the scope of his employment, under his supervision and in his presence. Gates v. Daley, 54 Cal. App. 654, 202 P. 467; Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co., 120 Minn. 368, 139 N. W. 611, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332; Appel v. Eaton & Prince Co., 97 Mo. App. 428, 71 S. W. 741; Wellman v. Miner, 19 Misc. Rep. 644, 44 N. Y. S. 417; Grant v. Knepper, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A. L. R. 845; Hollidge v. Duncan, 199 Mass. 121, 85 N. E. 186, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982; Slothower v. Clark, 191 Mo. App. 105, 179 S. W. 55; Ellefson v. Singer, 132 App. Div. 89, 116 N. Y. S. 453; Dillon v. Mundet (Sup.) 145 N. Y. S. 975; City of Indianapolis v. Lee, 76 Ind. App. 506, 132 N. E. 605; Semper v. Am. Press, 217 Mo. App. 55, 273 S. W. 186; Hendler Creamery Co. v. Miller, 153 Md. 264, 138 A. 1.

The appellant relies upon the case of Vorbeck v. Patten-Davies Lumber Co., 67 Cal. App. 475, 227 P. 929, as authority exempting him in the present case from liability for the negligent operation of his truck. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable from the present case, upon the very principle heretofore announced. In that case, Baldwin was employed by the defendant lumber company to load trucks in the lumber yard. He had no authority to operate the trucks. The driving of the trucks was specifically delegated to a yard foreman. A loaded truck stood in the yard. The foreman was not present. Baldwin asked a baker boy, who chanced to be present, to drive the truck out. He did so. An accident occurred. Baldwin was not even present on the truck, or within sight, at the time of the accident. Quite properly the court held, under such circumstances, that the lumber company was not liable for the negligence of the driver of the truck. That decision is not in conflict with the foregoing rule of law, which is announced with relation to the facts of this case.

We are of the opinion that the defendant is liable in the present case for the consequences of the negligent omission on the part of the employee, Takao, to reasonably regulate the operation of the truck.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Criminal law §393(1)—Defendant's immunity from self-incrimination continued on trial on issue of insanity after trial and conviction on plea of not guilty (Const. art. 1, § 13; Pen. Code, § 1026).

Defendant's immunity under Const. art. 1, § 13, providing no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, held to continue on trial of plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, where a separate trial was had on that plea, under Pen. Code, § 1026, after defendant's trial and conviction on plea of not guilty, and it was therefore error to compel defendant to testify in the insanity trial, since law providing for separate trials is procedural merely and does not affect substantial rights.

2. Criminal law §623—Defendant's constitutional rights and immunities are not impaired by provision for separate trials on pleas of not guilty and insanity (Pen. Code, § 1026).

Provision of Pen. Code, § 1026, for separate trials on issue of guilt and on plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, merely changes procedure, and does not affect substantial right or take away any of defendant's constitutional rights or immunities.

3. Burglary §3—Defendant's entry into room to take personal property for temporary use, without intending to deprive owner thereof permanently, is not burglary.

Defendant entering room to take owner's personal property merely for temporary use cannot be convicted of burglary, but entry must have been with intent permanently to deprive the owner of the property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Harold Lamey was convicted of burglary and other offenses, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Frederic H. Vercoe, Public Defender, and Franklin Padan, Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The judgments followed upon convictions of the several crimes charged in counts I, IV, and V of the information. Count II was dismissed, and a new trial was granted of the charges contained in count III. On arraignment, the defendant had pleaded, on each count, "not guilty" and "not guilty by reason of insanity." With respect to the pleas of "not guilty," the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the verdicts.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the court erred in compelling him to become a witness during his trial on the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Over objections duly made, he was required to give testimony relating to the issues presented by that plea. This trial was before the same jury which had rendered verdicts on the principal issues. Section 1026 of the Penal Code outlines the proceeding. "When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas only, and in such trial he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. If the jury shall find the defendant guilty, * * * then the question whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time the offense was committed shall be promptly tried, either before the same jury or before a new jury, in the discretion of the court. In such trial the jury shall return a verdict either that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed or that he was insane at the time the offense was committed. If the verdict or finding be that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed, the court shall sentence the defendant as provided by law. * * *"

It is declared in the Constitution of California, art. 1, § 13, that no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself. In this case, under the plea of not guilty, the effect of the verdict in each instance was that the defendant had committed the acts which, if committed by a sane person, would make him guilty of the alleged crimes. For the purposes of that verdict he was presumed to be sane, but, under his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, the question of his status and responsibility as a criminal remained open and undetermined. That he was a criminal and subject to punishment was not yet established. Under the second plea, that issue was to be tried separately, but it was all in the same case. The second verdict, equally with the first, was necessary before a judgment of conviction could be rendered. Under the former practice, when the defendant relied upon his right to introduce evidence of insanity as part of his defense, it was well understood that the state had no right to compel the defendant to give testimony as a witness, even upon that issue. We do not perceive that his rights in this respect are in any way different under the new practice. The change is only a change of procedure; it does not affect a substantial right, and it does not take away any constitutional right or immunity. In People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767, 772, the defendant was tried on his plea of not guilty, and then under his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, as provided by the present law. Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, 1026. The jury found against him on both pleas. On appeal from the judgment, defendant contended that the provision of the State Constitution guaranteeing a public and speedy trial to one accused of a crime "means one speedy and public trial, and no more." To this the Supreme Court responded: "The trial had by the defendant, under the present law, amounted to one trial and no more." The very reasoning which sustains the present procedure at the same time preserves to the defendant all of his rights of defense. Among these rights, saved to the defendant under the Constitution, is the right of immunity from being compelled in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself.

"According to one of the oldest maxims of the common law, 'Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare,' any person, whether a party or stranger to the litigation, either in a civil action or a criminal prosecution, may, if he sees fit, refuse to answer any question the answer to which, if true, will render him punishable for crime, or which, in any degree, may tend to establish a public offense with which he might be charged. Rapalje on Witnesses, § 261. This principle of the common law doubtless had its birth in the abhorrence with which confessions coerced by inquisitorial torture were regarded alike in England and America. 8 R. C. L. p. 78. Its soundness has seldom been questioned. And today it stands among the guaranties of personal liberty and security in all the Constitutions, both of England and America.

"The words 'criminal case,' as used in section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution, are broader than 'criminal prosecution.' To bring a person within the immunity of this provision, it is not necessary that the examination of the witness should be had in the course of a criminal prosecution against him, or that a criminal proceeding should have been commenced and be actually pending. It is sufficient if there is a law creating the offense under which the witness may be prosecuted. If there is such a law, and if the witness may be indicted or otherwise prosecuted for a public offense arising out of the acts to which the examination relates, he cannot be compelled to answer in any collateral proceeding, civil or criminal, unless the law has absolutely secured him against any use in a criminal prosecution of the evidence he may give; and this can only be done by a statutory provision that, if he submits to the examination and answers the questions, he shall be exempt from criminal prosecution for any offense that may be disclosed as a consequence of his examination." In re Tahbel, 46 Cal. App. 755, 758, 189 P. 804, 806.

[3] It is further contended by appellant that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction relating to the charge of burglary: "Before you can find the defendant guilty of burglary it will be necessary for you to find beyond a reasonable doubt that in entering the room and apartment of E. M. Dailey, he did so with the intent permanently to deprive the owner of his personal property. If you believe the intent was merely for a temporary use of the personal property, the defendant cannot be convicted of burglary."

We think that the instruction states the law correctly and should have been given. People v. Brown, 105 Cal. 66, 38 P. 518, 519. The phase of the case covered by this instruction was not, in our opinion, sufficiently contained in the other instructions given. The evidence showed that the defendant unlawfully entered the apartment of Dailey and carried away to a nearby apartment certain personal property of the said Dailey without Dailey's knowledge or consent. But the circumstances connected with this act were such that the jury might have found that the defendant did not intend to permanently deprive the owner of his property. If this be so, then, as stated in People v. Brown, supra, "If he did not intend so to do, there is no felonious intent, and his acts constitute but a trespass."

The judgment of conviction of the crime of burglary as charged in count I of the information is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial of all issues raised by both pleas to that count of the information. The judgments of conviction on counts IV and V are reversed solely on the ground of error as herein declared, relating to the trial on the pleas of "not guilty by reason of insanity." It is directed that the verdicts of guilty, as found on trial on the several pleas of "not guilty" of the charges contained in said counts IV and V, stand and remain in force without further trial thereof. It is further directed that the verdict on the pleas of "not guilty by reason of insanity" in relation to said counts IV and V be set aside, and that there be a new trial of the issues presented by said pleas of "not guilty by reason of insanity" as to said counts IV and V before another jury. After verdict shall have been duly returned upon trial of the issues now reopened, as hereinabove provided, the trial court will make such further orders or render such judgments as are in such cases provided by law.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

ROBBINS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.*
(Civ. 6265.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 23, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1930.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 927(3)—Evidence need not be reviewed on appeal from judgment of nonsuit except as tending to establish facts favorable to appellant.

Appellate court on appeal from a judgment of nonsuit need not review evidence, except in so far as it tends to establish facts favorable to appellant.

2. Railroads $\S$ 327(1)—Every reasonable opportunity to look and listen must be taken before attempting to cross railroad tracks.

Tracks of a steam railroad are in and of themselves a warning of danger, and it is duty of one approaching them to take every reasonable opportunity to look and listen before attempting to cross.

3. Railroads $\S$ 328(2, 3)—Person about to cross railroad tracks has duty of coming to full stop and alighting from vehicle, if necessary.

Where view of railroad tracks is obstructed, a greater quantum of caution is demanded, and, in case obstruction is such as to prevent a view up and down the tracks without coming to a full stop and, if necessary, alighting from vehicle, then it is duty of one about to cross tracks to do those things.

4. Railroads $\S$ 330(2, 3)—Failure of those in charge of train to give signal or absence of flagman does not absolve one attempting to cross tracks from duty of using ordinary care.

Failure of those in charge of a train to give customary or law-demanded signal, as by blowing whistle or sounding locomotive bell, does not absolve person attempting to cross railroad tracks from duty of using ordinary care for his own protection, and the same is true as to absence of flagman at a point where one is usually stationed.

5. Railroads $\S$ 330(2)—Adoption of safety devices by railroad or maintenance of flagmen does not release individual from obligation of exercising ordinary care.

Adoption by railroad company of safety devices or maintenance of flagmen for protection of public never releases individual from obligation of exercising ordinary care for his own protection, although quantum of care which will be reasonable may be less where safeguards are maintained.

6. Railroads $\S$ 327(1)—Obligation to stop, look, and listen before crossing tracks is not absolute.

Duty to stop, look, and listen before attempting to cross railroad tracks is not an absolute one, but rather one the exercise of which is dependent on particular conditions obtaining at the time.

7. Railroads $\S$ 328(1)—Test of negligence in attempting to cross railroad track, with view obstructed, is whether reasonably prudent person would have been justified in acting on appearances.

Test of negligence on the part of one about to cross a railroad track, the view of which is obstructed, is as to whether a reasonably prudent person situated as individual under consideration is situated would have been justified in acting on appearances as it may be assumed he did, and, where reasonably prudent men might disagree as to whether ordinary care was exercised, question is for jury.

8. Trial $\S$ 165—Every favorable inference and every favorable presumption from evidence must be considered, on motion for nonsuit, as proved in favor of plaintiff.

On a motion for nonsuit, every favorable inference fairly deducible, and every favorable presumption fairly arising, from evidence adduced, must be considered as facts proved in favor of plaintiff.

9. Railroads $\S$ 350(28)—Person placing trust in instrumentalities provided by railroad for protection of public and failing to give warning is not contributorily negligent as matter of law.

Person placing his trust in instrumentalities provided by railroad company for protection of public is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, in case they fail to give warning of impending danger or death.

10. Death $\S$ 58(1)—Defendants under affirmative plea of contributory negligence had burden of proving negligence of deceased contributed to death.

Defendants, in action to recover damages by reason of death of plaintiff's husband, had duty of proving that deceased was guilty of negligence contributing to his death under their affirmative plea of contributory negligence.

11. Death $\S$ 58(1)—One dying as result of accident will be presumed, without evidence to contrary, to have exercised ordinary care for his own safety.

Where death has resulted from an accident, and lips of injured party are thus sealed, it will be presumed, in absence of evidence to contrary, that he exercised ordinary care for his own safety.

12. Negligence $\S$ 136(9)—Contributory negligence is question of law when only one conclusion can reasonably be drawn from evidence.

Question of contributory negligence becomes one of law for court to determine, where only one conclusion can be reasonably drawn from evidence, and, even in absence of conflict in evidence, contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact which should be left to jury, if different conclusions on matter may rationally be reached from evidence.

13. Railroads $\Rightarrow$ 350(22)—Contributory negligence of deceased in attempting to cross tracks when view was obstructed held for jury.

Contributory negligence of deceased in attempting to cross railroad tracks at time view was obstructed held to present a question for jury under evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by Katherine Robbins against the Southern Pacific Company and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump, of Los Angeles (Frank J. Barry, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. [1] This being an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, it is unnecessary to review the evidence except in so far as it tends to establish facts favorable to appellant's contention that the death of her husband was caused by respondents' negligence. With this thought in mind, and ignoring all contradictory evidence, we may thus state the situation as it was presented to the court below on respondents' motion for a nonsuit:

The accident which resulted in the unfortunate death of Joseph M. Robbins occurred at 6:05 p. m. of February 24, 1926, at Prestolite crossing, a public thoroughfare in the city of Los Angeles. At this point the Southern Pacific maintains four lines of railroad tracks running in an easterly and westerly direction which are crossed by an oiled rock road. On the night in question the deceased was driving a Dodge truck, towing a Chevrolet car, in a northerly direction along the above-mentioned road when his truck was struck by a Southern Pacific locomotive running from west to east on the third track from the south and driven by respondent Baker, an engineer in the employ of respondent railroad company. View of the tracks was obstructed by box cars, of which there were 4 on the first or southerly track to the west of the road, the nearest being from 12 to 15 feet to the left of the deceased as he approached the crossing, while there were about 50 of such cars on the second track, so that it was impossible to see the third and fourth tracks at all. These facts were testified to by the witness Cunningham, who was riding on the truck with the deceased. The same witness also swore that he heard no whistle blown or bell sounded as the truck approached the crossing, that there "was not any headlight from the engine showing down the road," and that he was positive that the headlight was not lighted. No "wigwag" or automatic signal was maintained at the crossing at the time of the accident, but a watchman, the respondent O'Dell, was employed by the railroad company, whose duty it was "to stop traffic whenever a train would come—automobiles that crossed the Prestolite Crossing." At the time of the accident he had been so employed for the past seven months.

Robbins was familiar with the crossing, having frequently driven across the tracks over the same road which he traveled on the night in question. On this point Cunningham testified: "I had known the deceased the last several months; had ridden with him often; sometimes two or three times a week, and sometimes not so often; and had ridden over the same road with him often before, two or three times a week, for seven months, but not every week; sometimes I might go a couple of weeks and maybe I wouldn't see him for three weeks after that; had crossed with him there at this place sometimes in the evening several times." As the deceased and Cunningham approached the tracks at a speed of between four and six miles per hour—so slowly, indeed, that the watchman testified he thought the truck had stopped—the watchman was standing in the crossing, between the rails of the fourth or northerly track, facing the Dodge truck, "with the lanterns back of his legs." His instructions were to halt traffic on the approach of trains at night by swinging a red lantern held in his left hand with the arm in a horizontal position, while a white lantern, held at his right side, remained motionless, but on this occasion he gave no signal whatever of the approach of the engine. The deceased had driven the truck across the first and second tracks when Cunningham saw the engine bearing down upon them, and, with an exclamation of warning to his doomed companion, jumped from the truck an instant before the engine struck it. The speed at which the locomotive was being driven was such that after the impact "it kept on going for some 900 feet and at a speed of 35 or 40 miles per hour." Measurement of the skid marks on the rails showed them as extending 532 feet from the crossing. The truck was carried about 90 feet east of the crossing, and was "all smashed to pieces," and the driver so badly injured that he died the same night. Cunningham further testified that he was not watching the deceased at the time of the accident, but that as they were traveling toward the tracks he himself "looked up the track to see if any train was coming," but could not see up the track, and that he also looked when they reached the first track, and when they were between the first and second lines of track, and just as they were about to cross the third. The watchman's testimony was to the effect that he was blinded by the lights on the truck—"couldn't see what it was doing"—and thought it had stopped.

From the statement made by the trial judge in ruling on the motion for nonsuit, which statement is incorporated in the supplement to appellant's opening brief, it is evident that the motion was granted on the theory that the evidence disclosed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and it is upon this theory that respondents urge an affirmance of the judgment. In support thereof they direct our attention to certain well-established principles of law to which we shall now advert.

[2-4] The tracks of a steam railroad are in and of themselves a warning of danger, and it is the duty of one approaching them to take every reasonable opportunity to look and listen before attempting to cross them. Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093; Holmes v. South Pacific Coast Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 167, 31 P. 834; Green v. Los Angeles, etc., R. R. Co., 143 Cal. 37, 76 P. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651. If the view of the tracks is obstructed, a greater quantum of caution is demanded (Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Griffin v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Co., 169 Cal. 619, 149 P. 175); and, if the obstruction is such as to prevent a view up and down the tracks without coming to a full stop, and, if necessary, alighting from his vehicle, then it is the duty of one about to cross such tracks to do these things. Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675. Nor does the failure of those in charge of a train to give the customary or law-demanded signal, as by blowing the whistle or sounding the locomotive bell, absolve him from his duty to use ordinary care for his own protection. (Stefanich v. Payne, 54 Cal. App. 210, 201 P. 940; Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., supra); and the same is true as to the absence of a flagman at a point where one is usually stationed (Stefanich v. Payne, supra).

[5, 6] Indeed, it may be stated as a general rule that the adoption by a railroad company of safety devices or its maintenance of flagmen for the protection of the public never releases the individual from the obligation of exercising ordinary care for his own protection, although the quantum of care which will be reasonable may be less where the company maintains such safeguards than where it does not. Koch v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 P. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795. On the other hand, it is equally well settled that the duty to stop, look, and listen is not an absolute one, but rather one the exercise of which is dependent on the particular conditions obtaining at the time (Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co. [Cal. App.] 279 P. 474; Whitney v. Northwestern Pacific R. R. Co., 39 Cal.

App. 139, 178 P. 326), and that "if there is reasonable cause to believe there is no danger it is not negligence per se not to stop, look, or listen" (Wilkinson v. United Railroads, 195 Cal. 185, 232 P. 131, 135). In the case just cited, it is also held that one of the circumstances which will excuse a failure to look and listen is "where one has entered on the crossing under an express or implied invitation of the company's employees giving reasonable assurance of safety." Such assurance of safety may consist of raised traffic bars, of open gates where such devices are maintained at crossings, or of the absence of a watchman or flagman at a crossing where one is usually stationed when trains are approaching. Wyseur v. Davis, 58 Cal. App. 598, 209 P. 213; Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553, 554; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stegemeier, 118 Ind. 305, 20 N. E. 843, 845, 10 Am. St. Rep. 136; Elias v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 226 N. Y. 154, 123 N. E. 73, 74; Hooper v. Boston & Maine Ry. Co., 81 Me. 260, 17 A. 64, 65.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Stegemeier, supra, which is cited and relied on in Wyseur v. Davis, supra, was a case where a pedestrian attempted to cross a railroad track over a public street in the city of Ft. Wayne. The gates were open at the time, and the flagman was in his shed, but he gave no warning. It was held that under the circumstances it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross without taking the precautions usually required to discover approaching trains, and the court said: "The case at bar is to be discriminated from those in which the injured person enters upon a track where there is no affirmative assurance of safety, for here the fact that the gates were up and no warning given by the flagman was an affirmative assurance of safety, upon which a citizen might act without being chargeable with negligence. This case is essentially unlike one where the only negligence is the mere failure to sound a whistle or ring a bell, for here the assurance was that there was no train near the crossing. This assurance constitutes the distinctive feature of this class of cases, for the reason that it is in the nature of an invitation to cross and of a declaration that there are no approaching trains."

[7-9] In the final analysis, the test of negligence as applied to one about to cross a railroad track, the view of which is obstructed, should be: Would a reasonably prudent person, situated as the individual under consideration was situated, and seeing what he then saw, have been justified in acting upon appearances as it may be assumed he did? If reasonably prudent men might disagree as to whether ordinary care was exercised in the premises, the question should be left for the jury to determine. Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Gregg v. Western Pacific R.

R. Co., supra. On a motion for nonsuit, "every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence adduced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the plaintiffs" (Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., supra), and the fact that the deceased had frequently crossed over the tracks at Prestolite Crossing during the seven months preceding the accident, during all of which period of time the flagman had been stationed there to warn traffic of approaching trains, might fairly raise the inference that he knew that a flagman was kept there by the company whose duty it was to so warn the public. Seeing the flagman there as he approached and was about to cross the tracks, and noting that, instead of giving the customary signal as hereinabove described, the man stood motionless, facing the truck, and with his lanterns held back of his legs, had the deceased not a right to assume that the danger of which the swinging red lantern usually gave warning was absent? Did he not "enter on the crossing under an * * * implied invitation of the company's employees giving reasonable assurance of safety?"

To answer these questions in the negative is to hold that as a matter of law one who places his trust in the instrumentalities provided by a railroad company for the protection of the public is guilty of contributory negligence if they fail to give warning of impending danger or death. This is not the law. A case which well illustrates the true rule is that of Hooper v. Boston & Maine Ry. Co., supra. There the deceased and others were riding slowly at 10 o'clock at night toward a railroad crossing. They heard a whistle, but were uncertain whether it was from the road ahead of them or from another quite near. The gate at the crossing, though usually attended when trains were passing, was open, and no flagman was near. The view of the approaching train was obstructed, and the deceased drove on and was struck by it. It was held that judgment against the railroad company for the death of the deceased would not be reversed for contributory negligence, and the court said: "Clearly the gates must be tended, or they become false signals, and lead the traveler into the very danger against which they were intended to guard him. Open gates invite passing; closed gates forbid passing. And by these signals thousands of travelers are governed every day. And, as gatemen usually perform their duties with fidelity,—as much so as conductors, or engineers, or switchmen,—we think it would be a wrong to them, as well as to travelers, to hold that every one who trusts them is guilty of a want of ordinary care. It would not be true. Ordinarily, the great mass of the community do trust them. And, so far as we can discover, it has never been held by any court that to trust them is a want of ordinary care. The contrary has been held in many cases. A collision at a railroad crossing is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the traveler. But the inference of negligence may be repelled. And we think that an open gate and an obstructed view may be sufficient for this purpose. Certainly, they are sufficient to bring the question within the province of the jury to decide, and prevent a nonsuit, or the setting aside of the verdict, if the jury find in favor of the traveler."

In Elias v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., a case to which we have already adverted, the situation was similar in many ways to that in the instant case. There the driver of a sleigh was injured by collision with a train at a road crossing. There was evidence that a flagman stationed at the crossing was in his shanty at the time of the accident and gave no signal of warning to the driver as he approached the tracks. The court there said: "Where, although not required so to do, a railroad has stationed flagmen at a crossing, that fact, as to one who knows it and has come to rely upon it, may be considered by a jury in deciding whether under all the circumstances he has used reasonable care for his own protection. The absence of such a flagman may well affect the vigilance they would otherwise have required of an approaching traveler. As to the defendant's negligence, it is true that no flagman need have been stationed at this point. Having voluntarily placed one there, the defendant could later withdraw him. Its duty was done if it gave reasonable warning of the passing of its trains, and often the bell and whistle would as a matter of law be sufficient. Not always, however. Where the practice of guarding the crossing was not abandoned, where it was neglected by him whose duty it was to warn travelers, his unexplained failure might be found to be negligent towards those who knew of his habitual presence and had become accustomed to his warnings. The danger is obvious. It is like in kind to that caused by raised and untended gates. To some extent it is an assurance that the way is safe."

[10, 11] In the instant case respondents urge the lack of any positive evidence to prove that the deceased anticipated the presence of the flagman, or that he saw him, or that he relied on him to give warning of the approach of trains. The first of these objections has been covered by what we have said as to the inference to be drawn from the fact of deceased's familiarity with the crossing; the second may be disposed of by reference to the testimony of Cunningham that the flagman was on the crossing, facing the truck, and therefore in full view of Robbins as well as of the witness who was seated by his side, and by the fact that, if Robbins was guilty of negligence in not looking ahead, that was something the burden of proving which lay on the defendants under their affirmative plea of contributory negligence (Dawson v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 82 Cal. App. 141, 255 P. 215), and that there was no evidence that he was not keeping a lookout ahead. To this may be added the application of the principle that, where death has resulted from an accident, and the lips of the injured party are thus sealed, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he exercised ordinary care for his own safety (Larabee v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 173 Cal. 743, 161 P. 750)—in this instance consisting at least of looking ahead of his vehicle as he approached the tracks—and the further presumption that a person of normal sight and hearing "must have seen and heard that which was within the range of his sight and hearing" (Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992, 995). Manifestly, as to the third objection, no testimony could have been adduced as to whether or not deceased relied upon the flagman to warn him of danger, as only Robbins could have told what was in his mind; but here again we think it may well be inferred, at least with respect to a motion for nonsuit, that, knowing a flagman was stationed at the crossing, and seeing him there as he was about to drive across the tracks, and observing that he gave no signal, Robbins relied on these facts as an indication of lack of danger. There is most certainly no evidence that he did not rely upon them.

[12] It is only when but one conclusion can be reasonably drawn from the evidence on the question of contributory negligence that the question becomes one of law for the court to determine. Even in the absence of conflict in the evidence, contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact which should be left to the jury, if different conclusions upon the matter may rationally be reached from the evidence adduced. Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Young v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 438; House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 P. 308; Whitney v. Northwestern Pacific R. R. Co., 39 Cal. App. 139, 178 P. 326; Katz v. T. I. Butler Co., 81 Cal. App. 747, 254 P. 679; Dawson v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., supra. The rule is thus stated in Peak v. Key System Transit Co., 88 Cal. App. 354, 263 P. 578, 582: "In order that this court could determine as a matter of law that respondent [appellant here] was guilty of contributory negligence, it must be clearly shown from the undisputed facts, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, that a party has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure. Nehrbas v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 62 Cal. 320. The evidence against the plaintiff should be so clear as to leave no room for doubt, and the facts such that the inference is irresistible, to justify this court in determining as a matter of law plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence. Schneider v. Market St. R. R. Co., 134 Cal. 487, 66 P. 734; Schurman v. L. A. Creamery Co., 81 Cal. App. 758, 254 P. 681."

[13] Under the state of facts presented by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, we are of the opinion that the court below should have left it to the jury to determine whether, under all the circumstances disclosed by the proof, Robbins acted as an ordinarily prudent man might have been expected to act, knowing what he knew and seeing what he saw—in other words, whether or not he used reasonable care for his own protection.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF SAN BERNARDINO TP., SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 150.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

Justices of the peace §31—Justice's court, after finding that population of township exceeds 30,000, must take jurisdiction in accordance with law (Code Civ. Proc. § 112; Pen. Code, § 1425).

Justice's court, after finding that population of township is 30,000 or more, must take jurisdiction of all matters and causes coming within jurisdiction, in accordance with provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 112, and Pen. Code, § 1425.

Original application by the People for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Justice's Court of San Bernardino Township, County of San Bernardino, and George W. Holbrook, Justice of the Peace of such Township. Writ granted.

Geo. H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., and James L. King, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Bernardino, for petitioner.

Stanley Mussell and M. O. Hert, both of San Bernardino, for respondents.

MARKS, J. This proceeding was instituted in this court to compel the respondent justice's court and the duly elected and qualified justice of the peace of San Bernardino township, county of San Bernardino, state of California, to exercise original jurisdiction in certain cases under section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 1425 of the Penal Code, of which respondent would have jurisdiction, provided San Bernardino township has a population of 30,000 or more.

All the facts alleged in the petition are admitted in the answer, except that the township has a population of 30,000 or more, and both parties joined in a request to this court that it appoint a referee to determine the population of the township. Joseph Rich was appointed as such referee, and on December 17, 1929, submitted his report, in which he found that on December 1, 1929, the population of San Bernardino township was, and ever since has been, in excess of 40,000. The parties made no objection to the report and did not question the correctness of the findings of the referee. In accordance with such report and the findings of the referee, and upon the evidence submitted in support thereof, this court now finds as a fact that the township of San Bernardino, county of San Bernardino, state of California, on the 1st day of December, 1929, had, and now has, a population in excess of 30,000.

In the case of County of Los Angeles v. Justice's Court of Beverly Hills Township et al., 281 P. 611, the Supreme Court has held that the jurisdiction of a justice's court depends on the fact of the population of the township, and that, when it is found that its population is 30,000 or more, it must take jurisdiction of all matters and causes coming within the jurisdiction prescribed by the present law.

Therefore let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directed to and commanding the respondent, the justice's court of San Bernardino township, county of San Bernardino, state of California, and George W. Holbrook, justice of the peace thereof, to forthwith accept and exercise the jurisdiction prescribed by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California and section 1425 of the Penal Code of the state of California, for justice's courts in cities, cities and counties, towns, and judicial townships having a population of 30,000 or more.

HOLLY SUGAR CORPORATION v. MORRISON, Justice of the Peace, et al. (Civ. 75.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 19, 1929.

As Modified on Rehearing Jan. 23, 1930.

Justices of the peace — Justice's court must take jurisdiction when township in which court is located has been determined to have required population (Code Civ. Proc. § 112; Pen. Code, § 1425).

Where parties to cause of action stipulated that findings of the referee, that township had population in excess of that required for exercise of justice's court's jurisdiction, was correct, justice's court was required to take jurisdiction of all matters coming within its jurisdiction prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 112, and Pen. Code, § 1425, since jurisdiction of justice's court depends on fact of population of township.

Application by the Holly Sugar Corporation for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Justice's Court of Santa Ana Township, County of Orange, Kenneth E. Morrison, Justice, to compel the justice to exercise original jurisdiction in a certain cause which he had refused to entertain. Writ granted.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for petitioner.

L. A. West and B. Z. McKinney, both of Santa Ana, for respondents.

MARKS, J. This proceeding was instituted in this court to compel respondent to receive and file a complaint in a civil action wherein petitioner here and plaintiff therein sought to recover judgment upon a promissory note. It was alleged in the complaint that there was the sum of $592.89 principal, $100 attorney's fees, and accrued interest due and unpaid thereon, in a total sum of less than $1,000. Petitioner further seeks to compel respondent to take jurisdiction of, to proceed with the hearing and disposition of said action on the ground that Santa Ana township had, and still has, a population in excess of 30,000. The answer of respondent admits all of the facts alleged in the petition except the population of the township.

Upon stipulation of the parties, W. F. Menton was appointed referee to take evidence and determine the population of the township. On December 17, 1929, he submitted his findings and report, in which he found that the population of Santa Ana township was, and now is, in excess of 30,000. On December 19, 1929, this court found that the population of Santa Ana township was in excess of thirty thousand and ordered a peremptory writ of mandate to issue requiring respondent to file the complaint of petitioner and take jurisdiction of the action. Petitioner filed a petition for rehearing, which was granted. Petitioner's complaint was offered for filing with respondent on October 26, 1929. The original report of the referee found the population of Santa Ana township to be in excess of thirty thousand on December 10, 1929. Between these dates the statute of limitations had run on petitioner's cause of action. The referee has now filed a report in which he found that the population of Santa Ana township was, on October 26, 1929, and still is in excess of thirty thousand. The parties have stipulated that the findings of the referee are correct and that they may be adopted as the findings of this court. Therefore, in accordance with such report and the findings of the referee and upon the evidence submitted by him in support thereof, this court now finds as a fact that the township of Santa Ana, county of Orange, state of California, on October 26, 1929, had and still has a population in excess of 30,000.

Under authority of the case of County of Los Angeles v. Justice's Court of Beverly Hills Township et al. (Cal. Sup.) 281 P. 611, we must hold that the jurisdiction of a justice's court depends upon the fact of the population of the township, and when it is found and determined that it has a population of 30,000 or more, it must take jurisdiction of all matters coming within the jurisdiction prescribed by the present law. While this proceeding only involves the filing of a complaint in a civil action, the determination of the population of Santa Ana township herein at more than 30,000 should require the respondent to accept and exercise the jurisdiction prescribed by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California and section 1425 of the Penal Code of the state of California.

Therefore, let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directed to, and commanding the respondent the justice's court of Santa Ana township, county of Orange, state of California, and Kenneth E. Morrison, justice of the peace thereof, to forthwith accept and file the complaint of petitioner herein upon payment of the legal filing fee therefor, the said filing of such complaint to be as of the date of October 26, 1929, and further commanding respondent to exercise jurisdiction over said cause and proceed to the hearing and determination thereof as required by law.

INDIAN REFINING CO., Inc., v. ROYAL OIL CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 21.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 21, 1929.

1. Corporations $\S$ 45 $\frac{1}{2}$, 514(1), 672(2)—The word "Inc." when used following name of corporation or in pleading is equivalent to the phrase "a corporation."

The word "Inc." is an abbreviation meaning incorporated, and, when used following a corporate name or in a pleading, is the equivalent of the phrase "a corporation."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second and Third Series, Inc.]

2. Corporations $\S$ 673—Finding that plaintiff is Maine corporation and that many of its records are kept under its corporate name, followed by the letters "Inc.," held sustained by evidence (Civ. Code, $\S$ 357).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 357, providing that misnomer of corporation does not invalidate written instrument, finding that I. R. Co. is Maine corporation and is also referred to as I. R. Co., Inc., and that many of its records are kept under the latter name, held sustained by evidence, in action on contract, resisted on the ground that plaintiff had no authority to do business within state.

3. Corporations $\S$ 642(7)—Suit by foreign corporation is not itself "doing business" within state within meaning of statute (St. 1923, p. 1037, $\S$ 7).

The bringing of an action by a foreign corporation does not constitute "doing business" within meaning of St. 1923, p. 1037, $\S$ 7; the right of a foreign corporation to sue and collect purchase price of merchandise sold in interstate commerce being unquestioned.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Doing Business.]

4. Corporations $\S$ 673—Defendant has burden to show that plaintiff foreign corporation is not entitled to maintain action because of bar of statute, as to doing of business within state.

In an action by a foreign corporation on contract, resisted on the ground that plaintiff cannot recover because a foreign corporation doing business within the state without compliance with state law, defendant has burden to show that plaintiff is within bar of statute.

5. Corporations $\S$ 673—Finding that foreign corporation had withdrawn from intrastate business within state since making of contract, and was entitled to maintain suit on contract, held supported by evidence.

Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff corporation had right to do business within state of California, when contract was made, but thereafter withdrew and has not since maintained office within state for purpose of transacting or doing intrastate business, and therefore was entitled to sue on contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by the Indian Refining Company, Inc., against the Royal Oil Company, Inc., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

David W. Richards, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

N. C. Peters, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the purchase price of certain merchandise sold by the plaintiff to the defendant Royal Oil Company, Inc., the payment for which was guaranteed in writing by the other defendants. The complaint was filed May 18, 1926. The sole ground of this appeal is the contention that the plaintiff is a foreign corporation, that it was illegally doing business in California at the time this action was begun, and for that reason it is unable to maintain the action. Appellants attack the following findings of fact made by the trial court as unsupported by the evidence:

"I. The plaintiff Indian Refining Company is a Maine corporation and is also referred to as Indian Refining Co., Inc., and many of its records are kept under the name of 'Indian Refining Company, Inc.'

"II. That during the year 1925 when said goods were sold and the contracts made and the obligation incurred above mentioned said plaintiff was duly authorized to do intrastate business in the State of California, and had complied with all of the laws of the State of California, pertaining to the right of a foreign corporation to do business within this state, and had duly filed in the office of the Secretary of State a certified copy of its articles of incorporation as required by law.

"III. That in the year 1926 withdrew from the right to do intrastate business in the State of California, and since said withdrawal did not do any intrastate business in said State of California, and that said plaintiffs since the year 1925 has not maintained an office in the State of California for the purpose of transacting or doing intrastate business nor entering this state for such purpose."

Appellants first contend that there is no evidence that respondent had ever filed its articles of incorporation in California; it being their contention that there is no proof that Indian Refining Company, Inc., is the same corporation as Indian Refining Company. Frank C. Jordan, secretary of state, testified that the only record in his office of any foreign corporation by any such name is that of a Maine corporation, which was incorporated on November 4, 1904, under the name of Indian Asphalt Company, and that its name was changed to Indian Refining Company on or about May 1, 1906; that on January 24, 1914, this corporation filed in his office a certified copy of its certificate of organization and various amendments, with a designation of a certain resident of San Francisco, Cal., as its resident representative in California, for the purpose of service. He further testified:

"* * * However, there is no foreign corporation filed in this office by the name of Indian Refining Company, Inc. The nearest approach to that name is as above stated. The Indian Refining Company which I just referred to filed a certificate surrendering its right to do intrastate business on January 5th, 1926."

[1, 2] While this action was brought in the name of "Indian Refining Company, Inc.," as plaintiff, it has been held that the abbreviation "Inc.," means "incorporated," and is equivalent to "(a corporation)." Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Dimick, 169 Cal. 187, 146 P. 672. On the same reasoning, the words "Indian Refining Co., Inc.," as used in the complaint herein, are equivalent to "Indian Refining Company (a corporation)." The word "Inc." as used in the complaint is fully shown by the evidence in the record to be merely descriptive and not a part of the name of the corporation. Section 357 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "The misnomer of a corporation in any written instrument does not invalidate the instrument, if it can be reasonably ascertained from it what corporation is intended." One witness testified that he was assistant to the controller of the Indian Refining Company, and that "the correct name of plaintiff in this case is Indian Refining Co., but has heretofore often been referred to and many of its records are kept under the name of 'Indian Refining Co., Inc.' The two names refer to the plaintiff, a Maine corporation." There was ample evidence to sustain the first finding complained of.

The objection raised to the second finding is based upon the variation in names, just referred to. The evidence shows the action is based upon merchandise sold in the year 1925. No failure to comply with the law of the state of California prior to 1926 being claimed, nor any evidence thereof being pointed out, other than that assumed to arise from this difference in names, the evidence is sufficient to sustain the second finding of the court.

Appellants next contend that, even though plaintiff had complied with the law relative to a foreign corporation doing business in this state, including the filing of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, and the designation of an agent, and had thereafter on January 5, 1926, filed with the secretary of state a certificate surrendering its right to do intrastate business in the state of California, it still cannot maintain this action, for the reason that, after filing said certificate of withdrawal, it has continued to do business in the state of California, and that the third finding of fact above set forth is not supported by the evidence. The transaction out of which this action arose occurred in August, 1925, at a time when, under the evidence introduced, the plaintiff was lawfully doing business in California. If we assume that a foreign corporation may not, after filing a certificate of withdrawal from intrastate business in California, maintain an action here on account of business done prior to the withdrawal, if it has in fact continued to do business in this state after the purported withdrawal (see S. F. Breweries, Limited, v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. App. 433, 251 P. 935), there remains the question as to whether this plaintiff corporation so continued to carry on intrastate business, after notice of withdrawal.

[3] Appellants first insist that the bringing of this action in itself constituted doing business in this state, within the meaning of the statutes governing this case. St. 1923, p. 1037, § 7. We think that this contention cannot be upheld. General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkey, 156 Cal. 466, 105 P. 411. Where a foreign corporation has complied with the provisions of law enabling it to do business in this state, and has subsequently withdrawn from such intrastate business, and filed the certificate thereof in the proper manner, there is nothing in our law to prevent it from subsequently maintaining an action to collect an account that arose while it was lawfully doing business in this state, and the filing of such an action does not constitute doing business within the meaning of the statute.

It is further argued that the evidence itself shows that the plaintiff did, in fact, continue to do business in California after the filing of the certificate of withdrawal referred to. Appellants rely upon the following testimony of one H. A. Meek: "Q. You say you are the Pacific Coast representative of the Indian Refining Company? A. Yes sir. Q. Where is your principal place of business? A. Lawrenceville, Illinois. Q. That is where this correspondence has been? A. Our credit department. Q. Your credit department is located back there? A. Yes. Q. And what you have charge of out here is just a branch? A. Yes, the whole Pacific Coast. Q. The oil that is now being handled by Mr. Roberts and by you is being handled as distributors and jobbers to the customers? A. Not exactly. Mr. Roberts is simply my customer. I am still in the employ of the Indian Refining Company, and I sell to various people up and down the coast, of which Mr. Roberts is one of my customers. He is the distributor for Havoline oil in San Francisco, San Mateo county, and the north coast territory."

The record also shows the following testimony: "Q. Mr. Meek, at this time or since this suit was brought, plaintiff was not distributing oil from California. All oils are shipped from Lawrenceville, Illinois, are they not? A. Yes sir. Q. Since 1926 what time was it? A. The change in marketing policy was inaugurated in our company during the summer of 1925 to become effective all over the United States exclusive of the five states surrounding our refinery, just as rapidly as our property could be disposed of. That was in the summer of 1925. Our Los Angeles Branch property was sold in October, 1925, and our San Francisco plant in December, 1925, and starting with January, 1926, we had no stock of any kind or description on the Pacific Coast. Q. That is the company. A. The Company. Q. You were handling through jobbers? A. We handle nothing now but carload lots shipped direct to our distributors who have exclusive territory franchises."

Appellants cite Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628, as to what constitutes "doing business" within the meaning of the statute. In that case, a trust company organized in Michigan, one of its main purposes being to act as executor and trustee under appointment made in last wills, sought to be appointed and to act as such under a will being probated in this state. It was, of course, held that this was doing business in this state, within the meaning of the statute. It has, however, been held in other states that doing business in the manner indicated by the evidence here is not doing business within the meaning of statutes similar to the statute here in question. See Pembleton v. Illinois Commercial Men's Ass'n, 289 Ill. 99, 124 N. E. 355; Dinuba Farmers' Union Packing Co. v. J. M. Anderson G. Co., 193 Mo. App. 236, 182 S. W. 1036; Badische Lederwerke v. Capitelli, 92 Misc. Rep. 260, 155 N. Y. S. 651; McDowell v. Starobin Electrical Supply Co., Inc., 104 Misc. Rep. 596, 172 N. Y. S. 221; M. E. Smith & Co. v. Dickinson, 81 Wash. 465, 142 P. 1133. In the case of W. W. Kimball Co. v. Read, 43 Cal. App. 342, 185 P. 192, 193, the court said:

"If appellant was engaged wholly in interstate commerce and was not doing any intrastate business, the statute is inapplicable, because, in view of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution, the state cannot put any burden upon persons or corporations engaged wholly in interstate commerce. Manifestly the sales, followed by the delivery of the pianos in this state, upon orders sent from this state to the appellant in the state of Illinois, are transactions in interstate commerce and beyond the scope of the statute. (Citing cases.) * * *

"The right of a foreign corporation to sue to collect the purchase price of merchandise sold in interstate commerce is succinctly stated by the United States Supreme Court in Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 204, 59 L. Ed. 193, 35 S. Ct. 57, 60, see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes: 'We think that when a corporation goes into a state other than that of its origin to collect, according to the usual or prevailing methods, the purchase price of merchandise which it has lawfully sold therein in interstate commerce, it is there for a legitimate purpose of such commerce, and that the state cannot, consistently with the limitation arising from the commerce clause, obstruct or hamper the attainment of that purpose.'"

[4, 5] The burden is on the defendant to show that the plaintiff, in attempting to maintain this action, is within the bar of the statute. W. W. Kimball Co. v. Read, supra. There being evidence that plaintiff was not distributing oil in California, that beginning with January, 1926, it had no stock of any kind on the Coast, that it shipped only in carload lots, from Illinois, to customers here, to whom the goods were sold, we think the finding complained of is sustained by the record. The inference could fairly be drawn, from the evidence that, since the filing of the certificate of withdrawal from intrastate business, the plaintiff has been engaged wholly in interstate business.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

ALBRECHT v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 3626.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 3, 1930.

Purchaser, surrendering ranch held liable for gasoline and oil delivered to premises contrary to instructions, and used on the ranch after he had notified seller of gasoline and oil not to deliver any more to ranch, unless ordered to do so by certain company, and unless invoices were signed by ranch foreman, where he had agreed with vendors of land, as part of consideration passing to them for releasing him from contract, to pay for oil and gasoline in question.

On defendant's appeal from judgment for plaintiff, it must be assumed that trial court resolved conflict in evidence in favor of plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by L. F. Albrecht against J. W. Johnson and others for goods sold and delivered. From the judgment, defendant Johnson appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for appellant.

Lloyd Hewitt, of Yuba City, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff, as assignee of the Standard Oil Company, against defendants, for oil and gasoline alleged to have been furnished to defendants for use upon what is known as the "Diggs Ranch," owned by the estate of Marshall Diggs, deceased.

On May 15, 1925, appellant entered into a contract with defendants C. E. McLaughlin and Jackson Diggs, executors of the said estate, for the purchase by him of the said Diggs ranch, and therein he agreed to pay all expense necessary for taking care of a 400-acre peach orchard and crops on said ranch, from and after May 1, 1925. Appellant took possession of said ranch upon the execution of said agreement, and remained in possession until April 29, 1926. Early in the year 1926 it became apparent that it would be impossible for appellant to carry out and perform his part of said contract. After some negotiations had taken place, appellant and the said executors, on April 29, 1926, entered into an agreement by the terms of which appellant surrendered to them the possession of the ranch, his liability for the expense of conducting and caring for said ranch to cease from said last-named date, he agreeing to pay all bills incurred by him in operating the ranch prior to that date. During the period that appellant had been in the possession of said ranch, gasoline and oil had been furnished for use thereon by the Standard Oil Company. On January 28, 1926, appellant notified the Standard Oil Company not to deliver any more oil or gasoline to the said ranch, unless ordered to do so by the Valley Meat Company, and unless the invoices were signed by Hugh Asbill, appellant's ranch foreman. Thereafter no gasoline or oil was delivered to said ranch until February 23, 1926, just prior to which last-named date the Standard Oil Company was requested to make deliveries of oil and gasoline to said ranch by the said Jackson Diggs, who told the representative of the said company to go ahead and deliver gasoline and oil to said ranch, and that, if appellant did not pay for same, he would. Thereupon, between the 23d day of February, 1926, and March 31, 1926, the said company made 12 deliveries of gas and oil to said ranch; several of said deliveries being receipted for by appellant's ranch foreman, Hugh Asbill, and other deliveries being receipted for by other of appellant's employees on said ranch, no orders for any of said deliveries having been made by appellant, or by said Valley Meat Company. It appears that gasoline and oil were necessarily used in conducting operations on said ranch, and were so used in February and March of 1926.

[1, 2] Appellant claims that he is not liable for any of the gasoline or oil furnished for the use of said ranch after date of the aforesaid notice, to wit, after January 28, 1926, and he cites the case of De Prosse v. Royal Eagle, etc., Co., 135 Cal. 408, 67 P. 502, 503, in support of this contention. The last-named case announces the rule that "there is no principle of law involved in the action of quantum meruit which will justify a recovery for services rendered, in the face of positive directions not to render those services, by the party from whom it is sought to recover." And appellant claims that the same rule applies where material or supplies are furnished under these conditions. Appellant also cites the case of Montgomery v. Thomson, 152 Cal. 319, 92 P. 866, where it was held that such notice might be retracted by subsequent oral agreement. Under certain conditions the doctrine of estoppel or waiver might operate to prevent subsequent reliance upon such notice.

In the case under consideration it appears that appellant was present at the ranch when some of the deliveries of this gasoline and oil were made by agents of the Standard Oil Company. The same was received and receipted for by his employees, including his foreman. From the evidence produced in this case the trial court had ample ground upon which to found the inference that said oil and gasoline were used in the necessary operation of said ranch, while it was in the possession of appellant. But, aside from these questions, there is proof of another matter which impels this court toward an affirmance of this judgment, and that is the evidence produced by respondent to the effect that, as part of the consideration passing to the said executors from appellant for releasing him from his said contract to purchase the said ranch, he agreed to pay for the oil and gasoline which are the subject of this action. It is true that appellant denies that he made any such agreement, but this denial but produces a conflict in the evidence, and it must be assumed that the trial court resolved this conflict in favor of respondent. Taylor v. United States F. & G. Co., 86 Cal. App. 382, 260 P. 898.

We are of the opinion that there is substantial evidence to support the findings and judgment of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Husband and wife ⚭49½(8)—That deed was to husband and wife was evidence husband intended gift to wife of interest conveyed her.

Fact that deed was in form to both husband and wife was in itself evidence of husband's intention to make gift to his wife of interest conveyed to her.

3. Husband and wife ⚭265½—Administration of estate of wife grantee in deed with husband did not estop heir from claiming husband's interest was community (Civ. Code, § 164 [St. 1897, p. 63]).

Administration of estate of wife as one of grantees of deed conveying property to husband and wife held not to estop heir of wife either as administratrix or as one of distributees from claiming interest of husband to be community property of spouses under Civ. Code, § 164 (St. 1897, p. 63).

4. Husband and wife ⚭262(2)—Petitioners for distribution of husband's estate as separate property must overcome presumption that husband's interest conveyed to himself and wife was community property (Civ. Code, § 164 [St. 1897, p. 63]).

Burden of adducing evidence sufficient to overcome presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164 (St. 1897, p. 63), that interest of husband in property conveyed to himself and wife as grantees should be community property, rested upon petitioners for distribution of husband's estate claiming husband's interest to be separate property.

5. Husband and wife ⚭264—Sole appraiser's report that decedent's interest was separate estate held insufficient to overcome presumption property conveyed to decedent and wife was community property (Code Civ. Proc. § 1961; Civ. Code § 164 [St. 1897, p. 63]).

Report of sole appraiser in administration proceedings that deceased husband's interest in property conveyed to himself and wife was his separate estate was not competent evidence within contemplation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1961 to overcome presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164 (St. 1897, p. 63), that husband's interest was community property.

6. Husband and wife ⚭264—Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption that property conveyed to deceased husband and wife was community property (Civ. Code, § 164 [St. 1897, p. 63]).

In administration proceedings, evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption that interest which husband's heirs claimed as his separate property conveyed to deceased husband as one of grantees of deed, with wife, was community property under Civ. Code § 164 (St. 1897, p. 63).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George Philip Regnart, deceased, also known as George P. Regnart; W. A. Brooke, administrator, etc. From parts of the decree of final distribution Minnie M. Craig appeals, opposed by the administrator and Herbert W. Regnart and others. Reversed.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, and I. F. Chapman and Wm. Penn Humphreys, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An appeal by Minnie M. Craig, the daughter and only child of Cora B. Regnart and the stepdaughter of George P. Regnart, deceased, from parts of the decree of final distribution entered in the estate of the latter.

The court found a portion of the estate, to wit, $8,009.79, to be the proceeds from the sale of the separate property of the deceased, and distributed the same to the respondents herein, who are his nephews and nieces.

Appellant contends that the property from which the above sum was derived was the community property of the deceased and Cora B. Regnart, his wife, who predeceased him, and that the above finding is unsupported. This is the only question presented by the appeal, it being conceded that, if the above sum was community property, as alleged, the whole thereof, as provided by subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, should have been distributed to appellant.

It is admitted that four parcels of real property were acquired by the spouses in the years 1909 and 1916, the deed in each instance running to both as grantees, and the same were owned by them until the death of Mrs. Regnart, who died intestate on February 4, 1922. George P. Regnart was appointed administrator of his wife's estate, but, having died before qualifying, the appellant was appointed and qualified as administratrix thereof on March 24, 1923. The administratrix filed an inventory wherein it was stated that the estate owned an undivided one-half interest in the real property mentioned, and that the other half interest was owned by the estate of said George P. Regnart. The latter died intestate on March 23, 1923, and W. A. Brooke was appointed and qualified as the administrator of his estate. An inventory was filed by the administrator describing the above parcels and containing the same declarations as to the respective interests of the spouses as that filed in the estate of Mrs. Regnart. The sole appraiser, who acted in both estates, reported that the undivided interests of the decedents constituted the separate property of each respectively. Orders were filed in each estate confirming sales of the undivided interests of each in the same parcels of real property, the sales being made to the same purchasers for like amounts, and in neither estate were objections filed to the returns of sale or appeals taken from the orders confirming the same. The estate of Mrs. Regnart was finally distributed on November 2, 1927, appellant receiving one-half and the other half being distributed to the heirs of George P. Regnart. It was testified by appellant and a brother of Mrs. Regnart that the latter and George P. Regnart were married in 1906; that the latter was employed in a planing mill at San Mateo; that shortly after the marriage Mrs. Regnart opened a boarding and lodging house at that place and conducted the same until her death in 1922; that during the six or seven years immediately previous to 1922 George P. Regnart was not employed; that the real property in question was purchased with the money earned by Regnart while employed as above and the proceeds from the business carried on by Mrs. Regnart. No evidence to the contrary was adduced.

[1, 2] At the time the property was acquired section 164 of the Civil Code, which referred to the preceding sections 162 and 163, provided that "all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property; but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And in case the conveyance be to such married woman and to her husband, or to her and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her, as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument * * *." St. 1897, p. 63. The deeds presumptively vested the property in the spouses as tenants in common (Pabst v. Shearer, 172 Cal. 239, 156 P. 466), the interest conveyed to Mrs. Regnart being presumed under the above section to be her separate property (Gilmour v. North Pasadena, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 P. 1066), and that conveyed to her husband the community property of the marriage (Pabst v. Shearer, supra; Miller v. Brode, 186 Cal. 409, 414, 199 P. 531). Respondents contend that appellant, as administratrix of Mrs. Regnart's estate, having treated her interest in the property as her separate estate, is estopped from claiming that the remaining interest was not the separate property of the husband. So far as appears, the court in distributing Mrs. Regnart's estate followed the presumption that the interest conveyed to her was her separate property. Moreover, the fact that the deed was in form to both husband and wife was in itself evidence of his intention to make a gift to his wife of the interest conveyed to her (Gilmour v. North Pasadena, etc., Co., supra), and no claim to the contrary was made by those interested.

[3-5] There was nothing connected with the administration of Mrs. Regnart's estate which estopped appellant, either as administratrix thereof or as one of the distributees, from claiming the interest of Regnart to be the community property of the spouses (Baker v. Brickell, 87 Cal. 329, 25 P. 489, 1067; Dean v. Parker, 88 Cal. 283, 26 P. 91), and in this contention she was supported by the presumption that such was the effect of the deed (Civ. Code, § 164), in accordance with which the court, in the absence of proof to the contrary, was bound to find (Gilmour v. North Pasadena, etc., Co., supra; Pabst v. Shearer, supra; Estate of Jolly, 196 Cal. 547, 238 P. 353; Code Civ. Proc. § 1961). The burden of adducing evidence sufficient to overcome this presumption rested upon respondents. Estate of Nickson, 187 Cal. 603, 203 P. 106. While, as claimed by them, it was not essential in order to do this that an express agreement be shown, circumstantial evidence being sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 1961), the report of the sole appraiser that Regnart's interest was his separate estate was not competent or relevant evidence against appellant (Malville v. Kappeler, 4 Cal. Unrep. 843, 37 P. 934; Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 29 P. 117, 31 P. 561;

Ainsworth v. Bank of California, 119 Cal. 470, 477, 51 P. 952, 39 L. R. A. 686, 63 Am. St. Rep. 135; and the record discloses no competent evidence, direct or indirect, reasonably supporting the conclusion that the interest conveyed to Regnart vested in him as his separate property.

[6] The appellant being supported in her claim, not only by the presumption mentioned, but by all the competent evidence in the case, the finding of the court to the contrary is unsupported, and the portions of the order appealed from are accordingly reversed.

CHILSON (HARBESON, Intervener) v.
JEROME, County Auditor. (Civ. 37.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Dec. 18, 1929.

1. Statutes $\S$ 206—Statute will be so construed to give it full force and effect as far as possible.

Courts will construe statute so as to give it full force and effect as far as possible, so that it may stand in its entirety.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 48—Construction will be given statute which will sustain and render it valid in case language will reasonably permit thereof (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3541).

Where language of statute will reasonably permit, a construction will be given thereto which will sustain and render it valid, rather than defeat it, in accordance with Civ. Code, $\S$ 3541.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 48—Courts will not hold law invalid and without effect unless clearly compelled to do so.

When actions of legislative body result in legislation duly passed and approved by Governor, courts will not hold law invalid and without effect, a mere form without a purpose, unless clearly compelled to do so by circumstances of the case.

4. Statutes $\S$ 225—Statute should be construed with reference to whole system of law.

Statute should be construed with reference to whole system of law of which it forms a part, so that all may be harmonized and given effect.

5. Statutes $\S$ 225 $\frac{1}{2}$ —Generally, statute having special application controls general one without regard to date of passage.

Generally, a statute having a special application controls a general one without regard to dates of their passage, and an act general in its character will not annul provisions of one covering a special subject, even though it seems to cover the same general ground.

6. Statutes $\S$ 158, 159—There is presumption against implied repeal of statutes; inconsistency must be clear, actual, and irreconcilable before implied repeal will be said to exist.

There is a presumption against implied repeal of statutes, and inconsistency between statutes must be clear, actual, and irreconcilable before repeal by implication will be said to exist.

7. Statutes $\S$ 163—General statute in apparent conflict with statute having special application need not be entirely disregarded in case both may be given effect.

Where a statute having a special application comes into apparent conflict with one of general scope, the latter need not be entirely excluded from its field of operations, where the two may be so construed as to give them both effect without actual conflict and antagonism.

8. Highways $\S$ 97 $\frac{3}{4}$ —Law relating generally to right of county to assist in construction of city streets, and law specially applying to expenditures therefor, held not in conflict (County Aid Act, $\S$ 1, as amended by St. 1925, p. 236, $\S$ 2; California Vehicle Act, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389).

County Aid Act (St. 1923, p. 123) $\S$ 1, as amended by St. 1925, p. 236, $\S$ 2, relating generally to right of county to assist in construction of streets within incorporated city, and California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), as amended by St. 1925, p. 389, having special application relating to expenditures of county portion of income derived under the general revenue-producing provision thereof, held not in conflict, but each complete in itself.

9. Counties $\S$ 162—Appropriation of money to assist in municipal improvements is determination that aid should be given therefor (California Vehicle Act, $\S$ 159, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389).

An appropriation of money to assist in municipal improvements in accordance with authority of California Vehicle Act, $\S$ 159 (St. 1923, p. 568, $\S$ 159, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389), is in itself a determination that aid should be given city for such work.

10. Counties $\S$ 162—County board of supervisors appropriating money to assist in paving city streets was under no duty to designate fund (California Vehicle Act, $\S$ 159, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389).

Resolution of board of supervisors appropriating money for paving of city streets in accordance with authority of California Vehicle Act, $\S$ 159 (St. 1923, p. 568, $\S$ 159, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389), and directing its payment out of county fund designated as motor vehicle fund, named a fund out of which money could be paid lawfully, in that board after appropriating money was under no duty to designate fund from which it should be paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by W. E. Chilson against W. C. Jerome, as Auditor of the County of Orange, wherein Charles E. Harbeson intervened. Judgment for defendant, and intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas L. McFadden, Leonard Evans, McFadden & Holden, and Leo J. Friis, all of Anaheim, for appellant.

Charles D. Swanner, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

MARKS, J. Plaintiff and intervener, as taxpayers and citizens of Orange county, sought to restrain the respondent, as auditor of the county of Orange, from drawing a warrant on the treasurer of the county of Orange in the sum of $10,000 in favor of the city of Santa Ana, a municipal corporation of the fifth class, situated within such county, the money to be used by the city in paying part of the expenses of paving South Main street, one of its public streets.

The parties stipulated to all of the necessary and material facts and judgment was rendered in favor of respondent. Under the agreed statement of facts there were but two questions of law for the court below to determine, namely: First, do the provisions of section 1 of the act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled, "An Act authorizing counties to improve or assist in the improvement of streets lying in municipalities," approved April 30, 1923 (St. 1923, p. 123), as amended April 30, 1925 (St. 1925, p. 236, § 2), conflict with the provisions of the "California Vehicle Act" (St. 1923, p. 517), as amended May 19, 1925 (St. 1925, p. 389), and if so, which act controls; and, second, does a resolution of the board of supervisors of the county of Orange appropriating this money and directing its payment to the city of Santa Ana out of a county fund designated as the "Motor Vehicle Fund," name a fund out of which the money can be paid lawfully?

Appellant presents a third question, namely: Does the resolution of the board of supervisors determine that the paving of South Main street was at the time of its passage, a street improvement of general county interest? And, also: Does it further determine that county aid should be given to assist in paving this street? This last question only becomes important if this court should hold that the provisions of the act approved April 30, 1923 (St. 1923, p. 123), as amended April 30, 1925 (St. 1925, p. 236), which we will, for convenience, refer to as the County Aid Act, are controlling over the provisions of the California Vehicle Act.

The County Aid Act provides that: "The board of supervisors of any county may by resolution adopted by a four-fifths vote of the members thereof determine that the proposed establishing, laying out, opening, widening, extending, straightening, construction, improvement or altering of any street or other public way or any portion thereof within an incorporated city or extending along or across the boundary thereof or the establishing, modifying or changing the grade thereof or the separation of the grades of any two or more streets or other public ways which intersect each other or the separation of the grades of any such street or other public way and any steam, electric or street railroad crossing such street or other public way or the construction of the necessary pavements, curbs, culverts, bridges, tunnels, subways, viaducts, drainage facilities or other structures incident to or a part of such street or other public way or the acquisition by purchase, condemnation or otherwise of any lands, rights of way or other property necessary for any of the purposes hereinbefore mentioned is of general county interest and that county aid shall be extended therefor. Such resolution must refer to the proposed new or existing street or portion of street or other public way, the general nature of the improvement proposed and the nature of the aid to be furnished by the county and the fund or funds from which it is to be paid." St. 1923, p. 123, § 1, as amended by St. 1925, p. 236, § 2.

The act further provides that the county aid may consist of the contribution of money, or the furnishing of materials, engineering services or labor, or in the loan of its road-building machinery. The expense of the aid may be paid by the county from "the general fund, the general road fund, the fund composed of moneys received from the state pursuant to the California Vehicle Act or pursuant to chapter two hundred sixty-seven of the Statutes of 1923 * * * or from any other fund available for such purposes." It also provides (St. 1923, p. 123, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 236, § 3) for the taking over of any city street as a county highway, and its return to the control of the municipality.

Section 159 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 568, § 159, as amended by St. 1925, p. 389) provides that a certain portion of the "net receipts" derived under the terms of the act shall be paid to the county and "shall be deposited in the road funds of the several counties receiving the same and shall be expended by such counties exclusively in the construction and maintenance of public roads, bridges, and culverts in said counties respectively; provided, that the board of supervisors of any county may in its discretion expend any portion of such sums so received by such county in the construction, maintenance and repair of streets, bridges and culverts within those incorporated cities therein, the legislative bodies of which by ordinance authorize such work of construction, maintenance and repair." This act has to do with the control, operation, licensing of motor vehicles and their drivers, and the disposition of the funds received by the state under the revenue producing terms of the act, and provides certain penalties for the violation of its provisions. The general fields of operations of the two acts are widely separated, and only approach each other on the question of the use of the county portion of the revenue derived under the California Vehicle Act in aiding cities in the improvements of their streets.

It is admitted that the city of Santa Ana was within the boundaries of the county of Orange and that it had taken all steps necessary to authorize it to receive the county aid under either of these acts.

On the 27th day of March, 1927, the board of supervisors of the county of Orange, at a regular meeting, and by a vote of three for and two against, passed and adopted the following resolution: "That the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) be expended from the Motor Vehicle Fund in the construction of South Main Street in the city of Santa Ana, by paving and otherwise improving the same, it appearing that the Board of Trustees of said City have authorized such improvement and ordered the construction of said work; and that the County Auditor be directed to draw a warrant for said amount to be paid to the City of Santa Ana for the improvement of said street; and Be It Further Resolved: That the previous action of this Board in regards to the said appropriation be and the same is hereby rescinded." The resolution did not pass by the four-fifths vote required by the County Aid Act, so, if it stands at all, it must do so under the provisions of the California Vehicle Act.

Many more varieties of work and improvements may be performed under the County Aid Act than under section 159 of the California Vehicle Act, as will appear from their provisions already quoted. Under the former act the cost of the aid may be paid by the county from money raised from general taxation, or received from special sources, or from any other funds of the county available for such purposes. The aid may consist of the furnishing of either money, materials, services, labor, or the use of machinery by the city. Assuming, but not holding, that the large powers and authority granted under this act are lawful, the county may enter upon and engage in an extensive program of street opening, improvement and maintenance of city streets, building of bridges, separation of grades, etc., done largely at county expense and under its engineers and with its equipment, subject to the consent of the municipality, provided that four-fifths of the board of supervisors determine that the improvement of the streets are of general county interest, and the county funds are available.

Under the California Vehicle Act, the work or improvements for which aid may be furnished consists of the construction, maintenance, and repair of streets, bridges, and culverts. The cost of the aid must be paid from money received by the county from the "net receipts" paid to it by the division of motor vehicles of the state. The aid can consist only of money.

[1-4] It is the well-settled rule of law in this state that the courts will construe a statute so as to give it full force and effect as far as is possible so that it may stand in its entirety. Kydd v. San Francisco, 37 Cal. App.

598, 174 P. 88; Hunt v. Manning, 24 Cal. App. 44, 140 P. 39. If the language will reasonably permit, a construction will be given statutes which will sustain and render them valid and operative rather than defeat them. Section 3541, Civ. Code; Glassell Development Co. v. Citizens' National Bank, 191 Cal. 375, 216 P. 1012, 28 A. L. R. 1427; Cuthbert v. Woodman, 185 Cal. 43, 195 P. 673. The Constitution vests the law-making powers of the state in the Legislature, and when the action of this body results in legislation duly passed and approved by the Governor, the courts will not hold the law invalid and without effect, a mere form without a purpose, unless clearly compelled to do so by the circumstances of the case. Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 681, 78 P. 270. A statute should be construed with reference to the whole system of the law of which it forms a part so that all may be harmonized and given effect. 23 Cal. Jur. p. 784. It therefore becomes the duty of this court to give force and effect to both the County Aid Act and section 159 of the California Vehicle Act if it can consistently do so without doing violence to the terms of either act. The provisions of neither of these acts have been before the upper courts for construction. We find, however, that the rules of statutory construction are well established in this state by a long line of well-considered authorities that render the solution of the question before us less difficult than it might otherwise be.

[5] It is a general rule of construction that a statute having a special application controls a general one without regard to the dates of their passage and that an act general in its character will not annul the provisions of one covering a special subject, even though it seems to cover the same general ground. People v. Pacific Implement Co., 130 Cal. 442, 62 P. 739; McNeil v. Kingsbury, 190 Cal. 406, 213 P. 50; Riley v. Forbes, 193 Cal. 740, 227 P. 768; Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 44 P. 238; Glassell Development Co. v. Citizens' National Bank, supra.

[6] There is a presumption against implied repeals (Inyo County v. Hess, 53 Cal. App. 415, 200 P. 373), and it is the duty of the courts to give full force and effect to all statutes not expressly repealed in so far as this may be reasonably possible so to do. It is well settled that the inconsistency between statutes must be clear, actual, and irreconcilable before a repeal by implication will be said to exist. People v. Pacific Implement Co., supra; In re Johnson, 167 Cal. 142 (Ex parte Cannon) 138 P. 740; In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 384, 52 P. 799; Board of Education v. Talbert, 52 Cal. App. 657, 199 P. 555.

[7] In the case of a statute having a special application coming into apparent conflict with one of general scope, the latter need not be entirely excluded from its field of operations where the two may be so construed so as to give them both effect without actual conflict and antagonism. Cohn v. Isensee, 45 Cal. App. 531, 188 P. 279.

The County Aid Act provides a broad plan for a county to assist a municipality in its street improvement program, and provides that the supervisors of a county may use almost any of the county funds available to pay for them, while the California Vehicle Act limits the county aid to three specified forms of work, and limits the money to be used to that derived from a single source. There is another important distinction in the action required on the part of municipalities to obtain aid under the two acts. The California Vehicle Act provides that the legislative body of the city must by ordinance authorize the work of construction, maintenance, and repair, before the aid can be given by the county, which was done in the case before us. An ordinance is the most solemn form of legislation on the part of a city. The County Aid Act contains no such provision.

[8, 9] To the extent that the County Aid Act goes far beyond the provisions of the California Vehicle Act, it must be held to be an act having a general purpose and effect and that the California Vehicle Act and section 159 thereof is one having a special application relating only to the expenditure of the counties' portion of the income derived under the general revenue-producing provisions of the act. We therefore hold that the two acts are not in conflict, but that each is complete in itself, and where the legislative body of a municipality by ordinance authorizes the improvement of a given city street, the board of supervisors can pass a resolution giving county aid to the work by a majority vote only, and need not find that the proposed improvement is of general county interest, nor describe the character of the aid to be extended; the resolution being passed under the authority of section 159 of the California Vehicle Act. The appropriation of money to assist in a municipal improvement in itself determines that aid should be given the city for such work.

[10] The case of White v. Hayden, 126 Cal. 621, 59 P. 118, 119, disposes of the second contention of appellant. In this case the Supreme Court said: "However this may be, if it be the auditor's duty to designate the fund, and as no such duty is imposed upon the board, we do not see that the auditor would be bound by the act of the board, but that it would rather be his duty to draw the warrant on the proper fund, whether the board had designated the fund or not. The board has performed its legal function when it has allowed and certified the claim, and if it has made a mistake in indicating the fund, or has gone beyond its powers to designate the fund, the duty of the auditor remains to draw his warrant as the law in the particular case would authorize."

Judgment affirmed.

CARDOZA v. LEMOS. (Civ. 7063.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 2, 1930.

Joint tenancy §3—Evidence supported finding that niece of deceased was entitled to property as surviving joint tenant (Civ. Code, § 2235).

Evidence in action by administratrix for purpose of recovering certain property in possession of deceased's niece as belonging to the estate held sufficient to support finding that defendant was entitled to property as surviving joint tenant, either on ground that relation between joint tenants was not that to which presumption of exercise of undue influence attached, under Civ. Code, § 2235, or on ground that such presumption was overcome by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Clara Cardoza, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Dominigos Duart, deceased, against Libbie Lemos. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George O. Bahrs and Ralph Starke, both of San Francisco (Henry G. Sanford, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma, and Henry J. Soldati, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. The representative of the estate of said deceased prosecuted this action against the defendant for the purpose of obtaining a decree determining that certain property in possession of defendant belonged to the said estate. During his lifetime said deceased established with the defendant, his niece, a joint tenancy with the right of survivorship in and to all his property. This joint estate existed for a long time and continued until his death. Defendant now possesses and claims the property as surviving joint tenant. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendant occupied a fiduciary relation towards her uncle because of the trust and confidence reposed by him in her; that she used her position as confidential advisor to practice fraud and undue influence upon her uncle, and in that manner procured the creation of the joint tenancy. The trial court, sitting without a jury, found for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

The findings are in great detail, but are well summarized in the following excerpt: "The creation of said joint tenancy in said property was made by said decedent with full knowledge of the legal effect thereof and with the intent that the defendant would become entitled to the possession thereof and the title thereto upon his death; that the defendant, Libbie Lemos, did not at any time influence the said decedent, Domingos Duarte, in the creation of said joint tenancy and the said joint tenancy was created by said decedent of his own free will and volition and without the receipt of any advice or suggestions from said defendant."

The points on appeal are all to the one effect that the decision is not supported by the evidence. Appellant's briefs are devoted to an exposition of all the frailties, contradictions, inaccuracies, and inconsistencies developed upon cross-examination of the defendant added to the contention that the evidence established that respondent occupied toward her uncle such a position of confidential advisor that a presumption of insufficient consideration and of having exercised undue influence upon him arose by the provisions of Civil Code, § 2235, and that respondent failed to overcome this presumption by evidence.

The evidence in the record is sufficient to support the findings and decision of the court, either upon the ground that the relation between the joint tenants was not that to which the presumption of Civil Code, § 2235, is attached, or upon the ground that respondent overcame such presumption by evidence. The evidence shows that a close and affectionate relationship existed between uncle and niece for 35 years; that she nursed and cared for him in sickness and old age; that she customarily accompanied him upon shopping and business trips to town, and that she customarily acted as interpreter for him. On the other hand, there is substantial evidence to establish that deceased was quite competent to handle his own business affairs and did so, although he could speak but very little English; that he knew his own mind and exercised his own will; that respondent used no influence upon him to cause him to establish the joint estate; that he took independent advice, particularly that he had explained to him by the officials of the banks where he transacted business the full legal effect of the various documents by which the joint tenancy was established; and, finally, that he intended to reward respondent for her long years of service to him by making her the owner of his property upon his death by means of the joint tenancy with right of survivorship.

Appellant contends for the application of each one of the several rules assigned in opinions on appeal, from time to time, for reversing the trial court's findings of fact, but the evidence in this case is not such as to call for a discussion of them. The evidence fully supports the judgment and findings even conceding the most that is claimed for such rules by appellant.

Some time after the creation of the joint tenancy the deceased republished and amended his last will and testament by which he bequeathed his property partly to respondent and partly to other nieces and nephews. Appellant claims great evidentiary value for this fact. This is the most that can be claimed for it. No doubt it was considered together with the other evidence by the court. That fact did not establish a case for the plaintiff. We would have a similar apparent inconsistency if the will were given force to the exclusion of the joint tenancy with survivorship. The latter at that time was in full existence and operation and allowed to remain so until decedent's death.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by Frank Birkhauser against J. Edgar Ross and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. Edgar Ross and Anna M. Ross, in pro. per.

George L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, and D. C. Bitler and W. F. North, both of El Centro, for respondent.

MARKS, J. On February 21, 1924, judgment was rendered in the superior court of Imperial county in favor of respondent and against appellant J. Edgar Ross, in the sum of $2,000, which was subsequently reduced by the court to $1,400. Respondent collected the sum of $121.21 upon an execution and the remainder of the judgment remains unsatisfied. Under another execution he levied upon 102 cases of honey, 4 sacks of beeswax, 3 boxes of beeswax, and 3 boxes of comb beeswax foundation of the value of about $1,400, which were claimed by appellant Anna M. Ross as her separate property. She gave a bond to release the property from the levy of the execution.

Respondent filed an action to subject the personal property, above described, to his judgment and to cancel and set aside as fraudulent and void as against creditors, a bill of sale from J. Edgar Ross to Anna M. Ross, his wife, dated September 11, 1918, and recorded December 2, 1918, whereby the husband sold to his wife 490 colonies of bees and the equipment used in conducting his apiaries in Imperial county, together with an automobile and a truck. The bill of sale was prepared by respondent, who is an attorney at law, for J. Edgar Ross, who was then his client. The complaint attempted to reach other property and cancel other instruments executed between them, its allegations being in the following form: "That after the contracting of the debt on which the aforesaid judgment was recovered the said J. Edgar Ross assigned and transferred by an instrument in writing entitled a bill of sale, to-wit: on or about December 2nd, 1918, all of his personal property to the defendant Anna M. Ross, and on or about the same date conveyed by deeds and other instruments all of his real property to said Anna M. Ross; that said Anna M. Ross is the wife of said defendant J. Edgar Ross; that the said Anna M. Ross accepted the same; that said transfer and assignment was without valid consideration and for the sole purpose of defrauding the creditors of said defendant, including this plaintiff. That the defendant J. Edgar Ross has from time to time since the commencement of the debt for which plaintiff so secured said judgment herein turned over to, paid and delivered to the defendant Anna M. Ross, the wife of said defendant J. Edgar Ross, all of the monies received by said J. Edgar Ross from various sources as well as all of the property owned by said J. Edgar Ross, all without valid consideration for the same and for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of said J. Edgar Ross and in particular this plaintiff thereof."

The court found in favor of the respondent and rendered judgment accordingly.

The portions of the findings of fact and conclusions of law material to this appeal are as follows: "That subsequent to incurring the debt which is the basis of the judgment set forth in the creditor's bill and complaint, the defendant J. Edgar Ross from time to time paid, delivered and diverted to his wife and codefendant Anna M. Ross all monies and property received collected, and acquired by him, and transferred, conveyed and assigned by deeds and other instruments in writing, all property, in Riverside County and elsewhere in California, both real and personal acquired by him since their marriage, to his wife and codefendant Anna M. Ross; that said transfers, conveyances and assignments were each and all without consideration and not intended as a gift, but were made for the purpose of diverting and transferring said property into his wife's name to defraud this plaintiff and other creditors of said defendant J. Edgar Ross. That the property heretofore seized by the Sheriff of the County of Imperial, under the execution issued October 9th, 1924, on the judgment rendered in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Imperial, in Action No. 6658, in favor of plaintiff herein, to-wit: 102 cases of honey, 4 cases of beeswax, 3 boxes of beeswax and 3 boxes of sheet comb or foundation, and never was the separate property of Anna M. Ross, but was at all times and is now the property of said defendant J. Edgar Ross, and at the date of said seizure by said sheriff aforesaid was in the custody, control, and management of said J. Edgar Ross and was and is subject to sale under said execution and the proceeds thereof should be applied to the payment of his debts and obligations and in satisfaction of said judgment aforesaid and the undertaking executed by said Anna M. Ross and her sureties thereon are liable for the value thereof. That from the foregoing Findings of Fact, the Court determines as Conclusions of Law. First: That all the property, both real and personal, now standing in the name of Anna M. Ross is community property of said J. Edgar Ross and Anna M. Ross, and was acquired by them since their marriage, and was transferred, conveyed, assigned and diverted to said Anna M. Ross by her husband J. Edgar Ross and at his direction and request by deeds and other instruments in writing, subsequent to incurring the debt which is the basis of the judgment set forth in said plaintiff's complaint and creditor's bill herein. Second: That the transfers and conveyances of real and personal property heretofore made by said J. Edgar Ross to said co-defendant Anna M. Ross and now of record in Riverside County and elsewhere in California, were not intended as a gift from husband to wife, and are fraudulent, void and without consideration, but were made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of said defendant J. Edgar Ross and should be set aside and cancelled."

By the judgment it was decreed: "That the conveyances and transfers of real and personal property dated September 11, 1918, executed by the defendant J. Edgar Ross to Anna M. Ross, his wife, and recorded by her December 2, 1918, in the office of the County Recorder of the County of Imperial, California, were made with intent to defraud the creditors of said J. Edgar Ross and are void as against plaintiff in this action; that the conveyances made at the direction and request of said defendant J. Edgar Ross to said Anna M. Ross, his wife, of property located in Beaumont, Riverside County, California, and heretofore standing of record in the name of said Anna M. Ross, were each and all of community property acquired by said defendants herein since their marriage and were without consideration and not intended as a gift from husband to wife, but each and all were made with the intent to defraud the creditors of said defendant J. Edgar Ross and are each and all void as against the plaintiff in this action and were made subsequent to the incurring of the debt which is the basis of plaintiff's judgment set forth in the complaint and creditor's bill herein. And it is further adjudged, that the property seized by the Sheriff of Imperial County, California, under the execution issued October 9th, 1924, in Action 6658 was at the time of seizure in the custody, and under the control and management of said defendant J. Edgar Ross and the property of said J. Edgar Ross and plaintiff was and is entitled to have same subjected to and sold under execution and the proceeds derived therefrom applied in satisfaction of said execution and judgment. * * * And it is further adjudged, that the plaintiff in this action is at liberty to proceed upon his execution heretofore issued upon the judgment in his favor mentioned in the complaint and creditor's bill or entitled to the issuance of another execution, as he may be advised; and that the said defendants J. Edgar Ross and Anna M. Ross deliver to the Sheriffs of Imperial County and Riverside County, California, upon any such execution said property standing in the name of said Anna M. Ross, and particularly 102 cases of honey, 4 cases of beeswax, 3 boxes of beeswax and 3 boxes of sheet comb or foundation, or in lieu thereof the value of same as set forth in the undertaking filed by said Anna M. Ross in said action, and such Sheriffs are instructed and directed to levy upon any property, real or personal, standing in the name of said Anna M. Ross, not exempt from execution, to be sold and applied to satisfy said judgment of plaintiff and interest and costs of this action."

[1-3] The first questions presented on this appeal are whether or not the pleadings support the judgment and whether or not the evidence supports the findings. It will be remembered that, other than the descriptions of the property levied upon by the sheriff of Imperial county, and the bill of sale of September 11, 1918, the complaint alleges that J. Edgar Ross after contracting the debts to plaintiff conveyed by deeds or other instruments, assigned, transferred, or turned over to Anna M. Ross all and his real and personal property and all moneys received by him. This is the only description of such property in the complaint and the answer of appellants does not furnish any further description. It is a fundamental principle of pleading that the complaint must clearly and distinctly state the ultimate facts relied upon to constitute the cause of action so that the court may fully understand the issues, and the adverse party may plead to them, and may plead the judgment in bar in any subsequent action. Preston v. Central California Water & Irrigation Co., 11 Cal. App. 190, 104 P. 462; Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co., 6 Cal. App. 58, 91 P. 425; Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 231 P. 739. Where the court can see that a purported description in reality describes nothing, it is void. De Sepulveda v. Baugh, 74 Cal. 468, 16 P. 223, 5 Am. St. Rep. 455. The only property sufficiently described in the complaint, upon which an issue could be joined, was that described in the bill of sale, and that levied upon by the sheriff of Imperial county. In so far as the judgment attempts to go beyond this property it is not supported by the pleadings. The evidence showed that Anna M. Ross had the record title to a house and two lots situated somewhere in Beaumont, Riverside county, Cal., a cherry orchard in Riverside county in the neighborhood of Beaumont, and some lots in Imperial county. There was no attempt to get into the record any description of this property so that the evidence does not supply the lack of description in the pleadings.

About September 11, 1918, J. Edgar Ross consulted respondent in his capacity of an attorney at law about the transfer to his wife of the personal property described in the bill of sale. The instrument was prepared by respondent and executed by the parties. The evidence shows that all of this property was sold and the proceeds invested in a ranch in Imperial county, which was taken for an incumbrance thereon in 1920, and lost by appellants. As the value of the personal property had passed out of the assets of appellants, and both of them, the attempt to cancel the bill of sale in 1927 was nothing more than an idle gesture that had no bearing on the real merits of this case.

The personal property levied upon by the sheriff of Imperial county was not acquired by an of the fruits of the transaction of September 11, 1918. Some years before this date appellants owned some property in the city of Brawley which they traded for a house and lot in the city of Los Angeles. It does not appear in whose name the record title to this property was placed. Some time prior to the date of the bill of sale the Los Angeles property was traded for a cherry ranch in the neighborhood of Beaumont in Riverside county. The deed to this property placed the title in the name of Anna M. Ross, presumptively as her separate property. She lived on this ranch for several years with her children, claimed it as her separate property as a gift from her husband, received all of the income therefrom, and paid all of the expenses of caring for it. There is no evidence in the record that would even indicate that this transaction was tainted with fraud in the slightest degree. What little evidence of alleged fraud respondent presented was directed to the time he prepared the bill of sale for J. Edgar Ross, and did not pretend to refer to anything done prior to that date.

[4-6] A husband and wife may make contracts with each other (section 158, Civ. Code), and a gift from one to the other is valid, even without consideration (section 1040, Civ. Code), if not made to defraud creditors. A transfer of property cannot be adjudged fraudulent solely on the grounds that it was not made for a valuable consideration. Section 3442, Civ. Code. At the time the cherry orchard was acquired by Mrs. Ross, either the community, or her husband, owned property of the value of a number of thousand dollars, and the only indebtedness shown to exist at that time was the sum of $62.75 owed by J. Edgar Ross to respondent, which was subsequently paid. Where the evidence shows that the husband was solvent at the time of the conveyance of either his separate or the community property to his wife, and there was no evidence that the conveyance was made with an intent to defraud any creditor, the transaction cannot be set aside. Burton v. Mullenary, 147 Cal. 259, 81 P. 544. The personal property levied upon by the sheriff of Imperial county was produced by bees purchased on a contract from a Mr. Schope for $1,000, upon which about $550 had been paid at the time of the trial. Of this sum at least $350 was paid by Mrs. Ross out of the income from cherries sold from her separate property and to this extent at least she had a separate estate in the honey and other property taken by the sheriff which was not liable for the debts of her husband.

As the judgment will have to be reversed, we will notice some apparent errors occurring at the trial so that they may be avoided in a future trial, if one be had.

[7, 8] In March, 1918, J. Edgar Ross employed respondent as his attorney in various litigations, which lasted until July, 1919. All cases were civil actions, except one. The attorney's fees charged by respondent were not to exceed $35 in justice court cases and not to exceed $100 in superior court actions, except in one case. He testified that his maximum charge in justice court cases was $35. On October 7, 1918, J. Edgar Ross was arrested upon a warrant issued out of the recorder's court of the city of Brawley, under the provisions of sections 701 to 714 of the Penal Code, upon a charge of threats made to do great bodily harm to Ray Mitchell and others. Upon the hearing Ross was represented by respondent and the magistrate made an order requiring Ross to "pay a fine of three hundred dollars and invest the same in United States Liberty Loan bonds of the fourth issue, and be imprisoned in the city jail for a period of 90 days, but that, upon your paying your fine as stated and turning same over to your faithful little wife, the jail sentence will then be remitted." Thereupon defendant filed a purported notice of appeal to the superior court of Imperial county. A statement prepared and presented by such appellant was settled and allowed which, together with the transcript, was filed in the superior court. Upon the matter coming on to be heard, the superior court, without taking any evidence and apparently basing its action upon the statement alone, made an order vacating and setting aside the order made by the recorder's court, and ordered that defendant (petitioner here) be required to give a peace bond in the sum of $500, to remain in force six months from and after October 8, 1918." Ross v. Superior Court, 39 Cal. App. 590, 179 P. 536. This quotation describes all of the services rendered by respondent in the criminal action. The order of the superior court was vacated and annulled by the Second District Court of Appeal in the case last cited. Respondent did not appear as attorney for Ross in this last proceeding. His bill rendered some time in 1919 for his services in the recorder's court and before the superior court on appeal was $2,000, and furnished by far the largest item of respondent's total bill against Ross of $2,312.75. Respondent admitted payments on account in the sum of $133.28, and as there was no special direction or agreement that the payments should be applied upon any special items of the bill, they must be credited upon the earliest items which would more than pay all of the indebtedness incurred prior to the $2,000, which was not finally earned, if earned at all, until January 17, 1919. Anna M. Ross was not permitted to contest the validity of the claim upon which respondent's judgment against her husband rested in the first trial of this case in the court below. She was not a party to this judgment of $1,400 and was not bound by respondent's judgment against her husband or concluded from contesting the claim on which that judgment rested. Burton v. Mullenary, supra; Mullenary v. Burton, 3 Cal. App. 263, 84 P. 159.

There were two trials of this action in the court below, one in November, 1925, and the other in January, 1927. The first trial resulted in a judgment in favor of appellants. A motion for new trial was granted, and the second trial resulted in a judgment in favor of respondent. At the first trial J. Edgar Ross appeared and attempted to act for himself and his wife in defending the suit. He was not permitted to do so on the ground that he was not an attorney at law and therefore could appear only for himself, and upon the further ground that his interest in the action was adverse to that of his wife. Mrs. Ross appeared in person with T. T. Porteous, an attorney at law, and moved in open court that he be substituted for her as her attorney in the action. The trial then proceeded with Mr. Porteous appearing as attorney for Mrs. Ross and Ross defending in propria persona. The notice of motion for new trial made by respondent was served on appellants personally and not on Mr. Porteous. There is nothing in the record showing that Mrs. Ross had been substituted for Mr. Porteous in the action or that she or her attorney were present at the hearing of the motion for new trial. This presents the very grave question of whether or not the first judgment rendered in favor of Mrs. Ross was ever vacated, and whether it is not now a final judgment in her favor. The record here may not be complete on the matter of substitutions, so we are merely suggesting this question to the trial court. It also appears that the notice of the time and place of the second trial was served on Mrs. Ross personally and not on her attorney. She was not present at this trial, and the court proceeded in her absence under the provisions of section 594, Code of Civil Procedure. If the service of the notice was not regular, the trial should not have proceeded against her.

[9] The court struck paragraph 8 from appellants' amended answer on motion of respondent. Part of the allegations of this paragraph alleging, among other things, the solvency of J. Edgar Ross were material and should not have been stricken. Evidence was admitted at the trial on the question of his solvency, so he was not injured by the order. If the case is tried again he should have the right to present this evidence under proper pleadings.

The other errors complained of will in all probability not occur at a retrial of the case. Judgment is reversed.

SLOANE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal upon failure and refusal of plaintiffs to amend, after sustaining demurrer to their third amended complaint.

The present action was brought by plaintiffs against the defendant for damages resulting from alleged culpable negligence of defendant, as their attorney, in preparing findings in support of a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover damages for deceit and failure of consideration in a real estate transaction.

It is alleged in the complaint in the present action that plaintiffs employed defendant to represent them and to prosecute an action to recover damages from Walter F. Rau and Mary Rau, arising on a transaction effecting an exchange of properties; that the property received by the plaintiffs here in such exchange consisted of an orange grove and improvements thereon, situated in the county of San Bernardino; that this property was accepted in the exchange transaction on the representation that it contained 55 acres; that it was disclosed after the deal had been consummated that it only contained 44.59 acres; that an action for damages to recover the difference in value between the property as conveyed and its value, had it contained the 55 acres as represented, was instituted against the Rauses in the superior court of San Bernardino county; that the case was tried before the court without a jury, and proof introduced in behalf of plaintiffs that the property in question was worth $9,360 less than it would have been had it contained 55 acres as was represented, and that the court at the conclusion of the trial announced its judgment for the plaintiffs in said sum, and directed defendant here, the attorney for the plaintiffs, to prepare findings; that proposed findings were drawn up by plaintiffs' said attorney, and accepted and adopted by the court, but that said findings, as thus prepared and adopted, instead of stating that the property in question, had it contained 55 acres as represented, would be worth $9,360 more than it was worth with an acreage of only 44.59 acres, stated "that had said property embraced 55 acres, instead of 44.59 acres, the value thereof would be $9,360.00"; and that no statement of the difference in value between the property as conveyed and as represented was contained in the findings; that the defendants in said action appealed therefrom on the judgment roll alone, and that on such appeal to the District Court of Appeal the judgment was reversed.

The original judgment is alleged to have been made and entered about October 7, 1922, and the judgment of reversal about April 15, 1925. The complaint also alleges that the defendant attorney willfully, knowingly, and with an intent to conceal his negligence in preparing said findings, withheld all information of the fatal omission therein, and that plaintiffs had no notice or knowledge thereof until after the judgment of reversal in the Court of Appeal.

The complaint states that the defect in the findings was the ground on which the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment. It is apparent that the findings in question were insufficient to support the judgment, and, as a matter of fact, the opinion of the Court of Appeal, as reported in 72 Cal. App. 288, 236 P. 937, 938, shows conclusively that the judgment of reversal was based on the insufficiency of the findings. The court says: "It is perfectly clear that the facts as found furnish no basis whatever for damages in the sum stated, or in any amount."

Under the new section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 4¾ of article 6 of the Constitution, these defects of the findings could be cured by the appellate court, but, as the law then stood, and as is pointed out in the opinion, the appellate court was without authority to amend the findings, or to disregard the conclusiveness of the record as presented. No attempt seems to have been taken at any step in the proceedings to correct the error, and it does not appear whether a new trial was ever had or a recovery obtained from the defendants in that action for the damages sustained in the property exchange.

Plaintiffs' action in the present case is for damages and injuries, consequences alleged to have resulted from the negligence of plaintiffs' attorney in drafting these findings and in concealing and withholding from plaintiffs knowledge of the fatal omissions. The complaint contains four alleged causes of action.

The first demands damages on account of the loss of interest on the judgment against the Raus, from the date of its entry to the date of its reversal, in the sum of $2,430 and costs, which loss is alleged to have been the direct and proximate result of defendant's negligence in preparing the findings.

The second cause of action asks for the cancellation of a note and mortgage given by plaintiffs to defendant in consideration of the attorney's services, consisting in a large part of the services alleged to have been rendered valueless by the defective findings.

The third cause of action demands a cancellation of said note and mortgage under allegations that the plaintiffs were induced to execute them under the belief entertained by plaintiffs and created by the willful and fraudulent withholding of information as to the insufficiency of the findings in question, to sustain plaintiffs' judgment for damages and the consequent failure of consideration for the note and mortgage, based on defendant's claim for legal services.

The fourth cause of action seeks the cancellation of the same note and mortgage by reason of alleged undue influence of defendant as the confidential attorney and adviser of plaintiffs, and their reliance on his integrity and good faith.

A general demurrer was filed by defendant to each and all of these causes of action, on the ground that neither of them or all of them together stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against defendant, and also demurring specially to each cause of action on the grounds of uncertainty, ambiguity and unintelligibility, and further alleging a misjoinder of causes of action.

The demurrer to the complaint, which was plaintiffs' third amended complaint, was sustained in its entirety, and, plaintiffs refusing and failing to further amend, the judgment of dismissal from which this appeal was taken was made and entered.

[1] The correctness of the judgment of dismissal depends on whether or not either of the alleged causes of action is sufficiently pleaded. Respondent concedes the rule that, if any count or cause of action in a complaint setting up several counts or causes of action is good as against demurrer, a judgment of dismissal for insufficiency of the complaint cannot be sustained. Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 116 P. 553; Brandt v. Brandt, 178 Cal. 548, 174 P. 55; Jones v. Iverson, 131 Cal. 101, 63 P. 135; Etchas v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 60 P. 45.

Respondent calls attention to the fact that all of the decisions cited referred to rulings on general demurrer. It will hardly be contended, whether the demurrer is general or special, that, if one of several causes of action properly joined in the complaint is sufficiently pleaded, the action as a whole can be dismissed.

In this case, each of the four causes of action is demurred to generally for want of sufficient allegation of facts, and specially on the grounds of ambiguity, uncertainty, and unintelligibility. Dealing first with the special demurrer, it will be noticed that on each of the grounds stated to each of the causes of action the objection is directed solely to the insufficiency, uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility of the statement of damages. If the allegations of the complaint demurred to set forth a legal right on the part of the plaintiffs, and wrongful violation of that right by defendant and damage proximately resulting therefrom, a cause of action is stated, and it is not necessary to point out in detail in the pleadings the nature and extent of such damage, unless special damages are claimed; and if, in an attempt to do so, redundant matter is pleaded, it cannot be laid to uncertainty or ambiguity, if the essential elements of the cause are plainly presented, and show some actual damage.

[2] We are discussing now the sufficiency of a complaint to sustain plaintiffs' standing in court and right to recovery of some sort of judgment. Under the ad damnum clause as general allegation of damages, a plaintiff may prove and recover those damages which naturally and necessarily result from the act complained of, and such damages need not be specially pleaded. 8 Cal. Jur. p. 887.

"Under a general allegation of damages, a plaintiff may prove and recover those damages which naturally and necessarily result from the act complained of. These damages the law implies will proceed from the act, although the amount may often be in the reasonable discretion of the jury. They are called 'general,' as contradistinguished from 'special' damages, which are required to be specially stated in the declaration." Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 167, 11 P. 882, 884, 60 Am. Rep. 529.

"The question as to how general damages from the breach of a contract have arisen otherwise than as disclosed by the general allegation of damages, is the subject of evidence, rather than pleading." Lillie v. Weyl-Zuckerman & Co., 45 Cal. App. 607, 188 P. 619, 620.

[3] Considering the ruling on the special demurrer, as applied to the plaintiffs' first cause of action here, we find that each of the grounds of demurrer is based on an allegation that it cannot be determined therefrom:

"(a) How, or whether the interest of $2,430.00, which it is sought to recover, has been lost, or whether it ever will be lost.

"(b) How, or in what way plaintiffs or either of them have been damaged by any acts of defendants or of what the damage consists."

The particular allegations of the first cause of action to which these objections are adressed are as follows: "That by reason of the failure of defendant to prepare said findings of fact in a careful and lawyerlike manner, and of the fact that defendant caused and procured the court to sign and adopt in said action the defective and imperfect findings which were prepared by defendant in his capacity as attorney for plaintiffs in said action as aforesaid, plaintiffs have incurred loss and damage, in that said judgment rendered in said action against Walter F. Rau and Mary Rau, was reversed by said District Court of Appeal, and plaintiffs have lost the benefit thereof; that plaintiffs have lost the interest which accrued on said judgment up to the time of the reversal thereof, and would have accrued thereon from said time to the time when a new trial of said action could have been had, to-wit: as plaintiffs are informed and believe and therefore allege, on or about the first day of July, 1926, amounting to the sum of Two thousand four hundred thirty dollars ($2,430.00), to the damage of plaintiffs in the sum of Two thousand four hundred thirty dollars ($2,430.00)."

Whatever defense might be made to the measure of damages herein set forth, there cannot be said to be a failure to allege damage from the negligent acts of defendant, nor that there is anything ambiguous, uncertain, or unintelligible in the allegations; and it cannot be contended that the allegations of fact leading up to the reversal of plaintiffs' judgment fails to show that the reversal of such judgment, under the circumstances set forth, caused damage to plaintiffs sufficient to sustain a judgment in some amount, if shown to be the result of defendant's negligence and breach of duty. We reach the same conclusion as to the sufficiency of the first cause of action against the general demurrer.

[4, 5] The remaining and important question is, Was there actionable negligence on the part of defendant in failing to properly prepare the findings in the damage suit, in which he was acting as attorney for the plaintiffs?

We are satisfied that, under the facts pleaded, which, for the purpose of considering the ruling on demurrer, must be accepted as true, the defendant is liable for any damages proximately resulting from the fatal omission in the findings. The general rule as to liability of attorneys for their clients is stated in 3 California Jurisprudence, p. 670, § 73, as follows: "The law implies a promise on the part of an attorney, that he will execute the business entrusted to his professional management, with a reasonable degree of care, skill and dispatch, and the attorney is liable for a violation of this obligation, provided damage results therefrom."

This rule calls for at least ordinary skill and care in the course of the attorney's professional employment. This rule is stated in Gambert v. Hart, 44 Cal. at pages 542, 552, as follows:

"The rule firmly established in this country by the weight of authority is that an attorney is bound to use ordinary skill and care in the course of his professional employment.

"In the late work of Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, section two hundred and twelve, it is said: 'The true rule of liability undoubtedly is, that an attorney is liable for a want of such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise.' This is the principle recognized in Wilson v. Russ [50 Am. Dec. 386], 20 Me. 421; Goodman v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482 [68 Am. Dec. 134]; Cox v. Sullivan, 7 Ga. 144, and numerous other American cases, and, we think, is not only established by authority but is founded in reason and justice."

It may be conceded that where the mistake or omission of the attorney arises from controvertible interpretation of law, or some uncertainty or ambiguity of fact, the rule for liability for damages may not be strictly applied, but in this case, the mistake and omission complained of was obviously as to the most important part of the case, the finding of the amount of loss sustained by plaintiff from the difference in acreage between the tract of land conveyed, and as it had been represented. This difference in value was the main issue in the case, and the amount of recovery given by the judgment was to be determined by it. It is the last thing that should have been overlooked in preparing the findings.

Whether the failure to make such finding was the result of culpable negligence, want of skill, or mere indifference, it was, from the standpoint of liability, inexcusable. The same is true if it was a mistake of the stenographer, which was overlooked by the defendant, as would appear likely from the wording of the finding.

[6] Counsel for defendant do not very confidently question the liability of an attorney where there is responsibility for such an error as this. They rather try to place the ultimate blame on the judge who adopted and signed the findings. This position cannot be maintained. It is true that the findings became the findings of the court, but section 634, Code of Civil Procedure, recognizes the right of the court to direct a party to prepare and submit findings, and it is the accepted practice to leave it to the attorneys for the successful party to draft and submit findings. While it is, of course, the duty of the court before signing findings of fact and conclusions of law to see that they state the facts and conclusions as approved by the court, it will, however, not do to release the attorney from responsibility to his client for a mistake or oversight of the court, which has been induced by an error of the attorney. It cannot be claimed in this instance that the finding as made may have been the finding intended by the court, because the amount of recovery given in the judgment is the precise amount calling for the omitted finding, and dependent upon such finding to sustain the judgment.

The mistake was one for which the defendant was primarily responsible. It resulted in the reversal of plaintiffs' judgment, and presumptively to their damage.

We are of the opinion that the demurrer to the complaint in this action, at least as to the first cause of action, should have been overruled, and that the judgment of dismissal was erroneous. As this finding will necessitate a reversal and new trial, we do not deem it necessary to consider the sufficiency of the other causes of action as pleaded, since the pleadings will be open to further consideration and amendment, if necessary, in the trial court.

[7] The demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action is not well taken, for the reason that the ground of relief demanded in each arises from the same transaction, namely, the employment by plaintiffs of the defendant as their attorney, his actionable negligence in this matter, and his alleged fraudulent concealment of the consequences of his act from the plaintiffs. Code Civ. Proc. § 427, subd. 8.

The judgment is reversed.

BANK OF UNITED STATES v. FOREMAN.*
(Civ. 3959.)

In action by bank as holder of note, permitting indorser after trial to amend pleading and set up that note was indorsed on condition that part of proceeds be held on deposit for indorser's security held improper, since under Code Civ. Proc. § 470, pleading may be amended at trial in discretion of court only for purpose of conforming to evidence adduced in response to valid issues, and amendment should not be allowed which raises new issues.

contrary to instructions of indorser that part of proceeds of note be held on deposit for his security, held improper, where fraud of bank was not issue at trial of case, since charge of fraud must be alleged and clearly established.

4. Bills and notes $\Rightarrow$ 371—Accommodation indorser, although innocent, held liable for note, where purchaser had no knowledge of conditional indorsement (Civ. Code, §§ 3137, 3138, and § 3145, subd. 3).

Code, §§ 3137, 3138, and section 3145, subd. 3, on dishonor by maker and due notice thereof to indorser, since when a loss is sustained which must be borne by one of two innocent parties, it will fall on him whose acts occasioned loss, even though he be free from actual fault.

Where indorser was relieved from part of liability on note on ground that indorsement was on condition that bank hold such part on deposit as security for indorser, which condition was not made an issue, reviewing court must assume that record disclosed without conflict that purchaser was holder of note in due course and note was unpaid and nonpayment thereof duly protested and that holder was entitled to recover full amount thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by the Bank of the United States against L. O. Foreman. From a judgment for plaintiff for a sum less than amount demanded, plaintiff appeals. Modified, with directions.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SHENK, J., dissenting.

John W. Hart and Dely T. Walton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Stick and Stick, Moerdyke & Gibson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an unsatisfactory judgment in its favor upon several promissory notes.

September 9, 1925, the Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corporation of New York executed, unconditionally indorsed, and transferred to the plaintiff for a valuable consideration nine promissory notes for $5,000 each. Prior to the transfer they were each indorsed by the defendant. The notes were in the following form:

"$5,000.00

New York, Sept. 9, 1925.

"Sixty days after date we promise to pay to the order of Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corp. Five thousand & no/100 Dollars, at Bank of United States. Value received.

"No. ———. Due Nov. 9.

"Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corp.
"L. Charles Cox, Pres."

Indorsed:

"Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corp.

"L. Charles Cox, Pres.

"L. O. Foreman."

The aircraft corporation was financially involved. The defendant Foreman was a substantial stockholder in the corporation and resided at Los Angeles. A plan existed to liquidate the indebtedness by executing and discounting notes of the corporation, and by then recapitalizing the institution on the basis of a much larger valuation. This plan was disclosed to the defendant by a Mr. Smyth, a member of the New York law firm of Lee, Smyth & Wise, which had charge of the re-financing project. For the purpose of extending his financial standing to the paper, the defendant filled out these nine notes at his office in Los Angeles, in the form above quoted, with the exception that the dates were left blank and the notes were not then signed or indorsed by the aircraft corporation. The defendant then affixed his unqualified indorsement on the back of each note and sent them to Mr. Smyth to be executed and indorsed by the aircraft corporation and discounted at the bank. The following message of instructions was sent to Smyth by the defendant:

"S. C. 48, 106 N. L.

"G. S. Los Angeles, Calif. 9

"Nathan Smyth, Care Lee, Smyth and Wise, 7 Dey St., New York, N. Y.: This will authorize you to turn over to Capt. Cox forty-five thousand dollars worth of notes which you now have bearing my endorsement for the purpose of being discounted at Bank of United States proceed(s) to be used as follows to take up notes bearing my personal endorsement amounting to thirty thousand dollars with W. S. Guardian Co. American Trust and Seventh Avenue National and forward same to me here together (with) certificate of deposit for fifteen thousand dollars to be held by me which is to cover cash balance left there per Cox wire (period) Wire me when Guardian is paid also any other information.
L. O. Foreman."

The bank had no knowledge of this telegram or the conditions which it contained. The defendant never personally met any of the officers of the bank. He dealt entirely through Smyth. Prior to accepting and paying the aircraft corporation notes, the following message was sent to the defendant from B. K. Marcus, the vice president of the bank through whom the sale of the notes was negotiated:

"Cox Klemin Aircraft Corporation offer us for discount nine of their notes each for five thousand dollars dated today payable sixty days after date at our bank in New York. Notes endorsed by you and Cox. Please telegraph confirming your endorsement."

The defendant confirmed the transaction by telegram in the same language contained in the following letter subsequently sent to him by Marcus:

"New York, September 10, 1925.

"* * * We confirm having sent you the following telegram on September 9th * * * (here follows the language of the foregoing telegram) to which you replied as follows: 'My endorsement on nine notes each for five thousand dollars of Cox Klemin Aircraft Corporation and endorsed by Cox is Okay.'

"Acting on your telegram we have discounted for the Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corporation the notes herein mentioned."

These notes were discounted by the plaintiff bank September 9, 1925, acting solely through Mr. Marcus, its vice president. The transaction was negotiated through the assistance of one Freedman, who was employed for this purpose by Mr. Smyth in behalf of the aircraft corporation. Cox was also present at the time. Neither Smyth nor Foreman was present. The bank consented to discount the notes, but insisted upon 25 per cent. of the amount remaining with the bank for deposit in compliance with its customary bank rule. Mr. Cox, however, insisted that the aircraft corporation required the immediate use of approximately $45,000. It was then arranged that the aircraft corporation should execute an additional note of $15,000, which it did. The defendant had no knowledge of this $15,000 note and it did not contain his indorsement. In lieu of the cash for this last note, a certificate of deposit payable to the aircraft corporation was issued, indorsed, attached to the note, and retained in the bank. When this note matured in 60 days, it was paid by transfer of the certificate to the bank and the cancellation thereof. The transaction regarding the last note appears to have been a mere formal circuitous method of conforming to the rule of the bank. On the face of the transaction the entire amount involved was $60,000. As a matter of fact the aircraft corporation was negotiating nine of its notes for $5,000 each, and was paid by the bank $45,000 less the interest on the notes until the date of maturity. Thirty thousand dollars of this sum was turned over to Smyth, who paid the obligations pursuant to his telegram of instructions from the defendant. The certificate of deposit was not sent to the defendant.

None of these notes were paid. At the time of their maturity they were duly presented for payment and dishonored. Notice of dishonor and nonpayment was regularly served. Suit was thereupon filed. The complaint stated a simple cause of action for the nonpayment of these nine promissory notes. The answer merely denied seriatim the allegations of the complaint. At the beginning of the trial on April 26, 1927, a motion on the part of the defendant for a continuance was denied. On the following day the trial was concluded and the cause was submitted. May 23d a court memorandum for judgment in favor of the plaintiff was filed. June 14th the defendant served and made a motion to amend his answer to conform to the proofs, which was granted over plaintiff's objection. The amendment was filed June 21st.

In this amendment to the answer, for the first time the defendant alleged that the notes were indorsed and transferred to the bank upon the express condition that $15,000 of the proceeds therefrom were to be held on deposit for his security; that the bank took the notes with knowledge of this condition; and that the defendant was entitled to credit for this sum on his obligation arising from his indorsement of the notes. The trial court took this view of the case, and adopted findings to the effect that the defendant was not a holder or transferee of the notes, but was a mere accommodation indorser thereof; that the notes were forwarded to Smyth to be delivered to the bank and discounted for the benefit of the aircraft corporation on condition that $15,000 of the proceeds therefrom should remain on deposit in the bank, represented by a certificate of deposit which was to be delivered to and held by the defendant as his security; that on September 9, 1925, the bank accepted and discounted these notes with full knowledge of the said conditions, but failed to comply therewith; that without the knowledge of the defendant an additional $15,000 note of the aircraft corporation without the defendant's indorsement was also at the same time discounted at the bank, in payment for which a $15,000 certificate of deposit was issued to the aircraft corporation, indorsed to the bank and held by it as security for the payment of this last note upon the maturity of which the note was paid by the cancellation of the certificate; that the notes became due on November 9, 1925, but that no part of the principal or interest from the date of maturity was paid; that the notes were duly presented and dishonored and that notice of nonpayment and dishonor thereof was regularly served; and that the bank fraudulently converted and appropriated to its own use the $15,000 represented by the certificate of deposit, to the defendant's damage in that sum.

Thereupon the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $30,000 and interest only, crediting the defendant with said sum of $15,000.

From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed. It is contended that the court erroneously permitted the defendant to amend his answer and that the evidence does not support the allegations of the amendment. It is also asserted that the bank was an innocent purchaser of the notes before maturity, for value, without knowledge of the alleged conditions or infirmities, and that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the full amount of the notes with interest from the date of maturity.

An accommodation indorser of a note for the benefit of the payee, prior to delivery, is ordinarily liable to all parties subsequent to the payee. Section 3145, subd. 3, Civ. Code.

There is no evidence of knowledge on the part of the bank of the condition of transfer of the notes to the effect that $15,000 of the proceeds were to be retained by the bank as security for the defendant. Smyth was not an agent of the bank. The defendant had never before dealt with this bank, and except for the unconditional telegram confirming authorization to discount the notes, above quoted, he never communicated with the bank regarding the transaction. The defendant dealt entirely through Mr. Smyth. The negotiations on the part of the aircraft corporation were conducted entirely through Mr. Marcus, the vice president. He disclaims any knowledge of the conditions upon which the notes were to be transferred.

Mr. Marcus testified regarding the $15,000 certificate as follows:

"We regarded the $15,000 loan as the mechanics for creating a $15,000 balance and the rest of the money to be at the disposal of the Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corporation, that is $45,000, and the most that Cox could withdraw of the $60,000 I loaned to Cox-Klemin was $45,000.

"Q. As a matter of fact was not this fifteen thousand dollar certificate of deposit to be security for these nine notes of five thousand dollars each? A. It was not.

"Q. Was not that what Cox told you should be done? A. It was not."

Mr. Marcus said he had but one communication with Smyth regarding the transaction, which conversation took place over the phone, and that nothing was said about delivering the $15,000 certificate to the defendant, or about any conditions which Foreman imposed upon the transfer of the notes. He said he was not even told that the $30,000 which was turned over to Smyth was to be used at the request of the defendant to pay specific obligations. He was asked:

"Did any one tell you that? A. No.

"Q. Did you know it? A. No."

Regarding the conditions upon which the notes were to be transferred, all that the record discloses is that Mr. Smyth testified that:

Marcus called him up and inquired about the financial standing of the defendant and that he then told Mr. Marcus that "those notes aggregated $45,000, * * * we had them to turn over to Captain Cox to be discounted under Mr. Foreman's instructions, and that he (Mr. Marcus) stated that they were going to keep $15,000 on deposit, my recollection being (that sum was to be) represented by a certificate of deposit, and that I told him * * * yes I so understood the transaction. * * *

"Q. Did you tell Mr. Marcus that Mr. Foreman wanted that $15,000 to remain on deposit in connection with this loan to be made on the nine notes aggregating $45,000? A. I am quite certain I did not say anything about Mr. Foreman's desires to that effect. The conversation was that the bank * * * wanted to keep $15,000 on deposit and would give a certificate of deposit for that amount. Mr. Marcus did not say anything to me about the additional loan of $15,000 to the Cox-Klemin Aircraft Corporation."

[1] Assuming that the defendant instructed Smyth to discount the notes only on condition that he was to hold a certificate of deposit for $15,000 of the proceeds, the record is nevertheless devoid of any evidence that this information was ever imparted to the bank. Marcus even took the precaution to wire the defendant for confirmation of his authority to discount the notes. This confirmation was promptly sent unconditionally. The record contains no evidence that the bank had any previous knowledge of the alleged condition. We are unable to find circumstances which would even place the bank on inquiry as to the existence of such a condition. The defendant appears to have been ignorant of the execution of the additional $15,000 note and certificate of deposit. He never complained of a failure to send him the certificate. This transaction was evidently a mere method of conforming to the bank rule to retain on deposit about twenty-five per cent. of the proceeds of such transactions. The bank accepted the financial standing of the defendant as ample security for the nine notes aggregating $45,000, and did not permit the balance of the money to leave its control. The defendant was the only responsible party on the notes upon whom the bank relied. His name was not on the last $15,000 note. That may reasonably account for the bank retaining the certificate of deposit for this sum. Our attention is not called to any evidence showing knowledge of the condition or infirmities of the notes on the part of the bank. Nor will the circumstances support a finding of fraud or collusion on the part of the bank with respect to the transaction. We are therefore impelled to hold that the record shows the bank to have been an innocent purchaser and holder of the nine notes, prior to maturity, for value, without knowledge of any conditions or infirmities thereof. Neither the amendment to the answer nor the findings in conflict with this conclusion are supported by the evidence.

[2] A pleading may be amended at the trial in the discretion of the court only for the purpose of conforming to the evidence adduced in response to the valid issues. Section 470, Code Civ. Proc. Amendments to pleadings at or following the trial and before judgment is rendered, should not be allowed over the objection of the adverse party, which raises new issues that were not included in the original pleadings. Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 53 P. 560; Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 135 P. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011; Tower v. Wilson, 45 Cal. App. 123, 135, 188 P. 87; Williams v. Youtz, 178 Cal. 107, 109, 172 P. 383.

[3] In the present case the defendant was relieved by the trial court of his obligation to the extent of $15,000 on the theory that the bank fraudulently converted the certificate of deposit to its own use contrary to the instructions of respondent. Certainly the fraud of the bank was not an issue at the trial of the case. The plaintiff had no opportunity to defend upon an accusation of fraud. A charge of fraud must be alleged and clearly established. 12 Cal. Jur. 800, § 62; 12 R. O. L. 416, § 164; 31 Cyc. 685; 10 Standard Enc. of Proc. 49; Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 26 P. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469; Abrams v. Daugherty, 60 Cal. App. 297, 304, 212 P. 942.

[4] Since the evidence in the present case fails to show that the bank had actual notice of the conditions or infirmities in the transfer of the notes, but upon the contrary shows the notes were purchased in good faith for a valuable consideration prior to maturity, the bank must be deemed to have been a holder thereof in due course, and the accommodation indorser of the notes was therefore liable for the payment thereof upon dishonor of the notes by the maker after due notice thereof. Section 3145, subd. 3, Civ. Code.

It is the policy of the law merchant, and has long been an established rule, to encourage the free circulation and credit of negotiable paper.

Accordingly it has been uniformly held that the holder of such instruments in due course without knowledge of their infirmities may recover upon the obligations regardless of defects which might impeach their validity between former parties. Section 3138, Civ. Code; 3 R. C. L. 997, § 207.

"To constitute notice of an infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith." Section 3137, Civ. Code.

Smyth was not the agent of the bank. Regardless of the nature of restrictions or conditions upon the transfer of the notes which may have been communicated to him, in the absence of evidence of knowledge thereof on the part of the bank, the appellant must be deemed to be the holder in due course free from infirmities and therefore entitled to payment of the notes in full. Goodale v. Thom, 199 Cal. 307, 314, 249 P. 11; Smith v. Armstrong, 85 Cal. App. 624, 631, 260 P. 347; Havens v. Foskett, 81 Cal. App. 653, 254 P. 642; Johnson v. Ulrey, 201 Cal. 456, 469, 257 P. 505, 511. In the last-mentioned case, which was an appeal from a judgment in favor of the holder of a promissory note in due course, wherein the defendant in his answer formally charged a fraudulent transfer thereof to the holder, the court said: "The evidence fails to show that Brown, the cashier of the bank, had any knowledge of the unlawful scheme of Carrere and Little. The bank, therefore, took appellant's note free of any notice or knowledge of said fraud, and, having given a valuable consideration therefor, is entitled to enforce the payment thereof against appellant."

Clearly the defendant was the victim of the plan of the aircraft corporation to refinance its affairs. That organization procured $45,000 of the bank's money. The aircraft corporation was evidently defunct. The bank discounted the notes, relying upon the responsibility of the defendant. Whether the loss was sustained through the fault of the aircraft corporation or through the unfaithfulness of the attorney Smyth is not material so far as this action is concerned, so long as the bank was ignorant of the wrong. So far as the record discloses, both the plaintiff and the defendant were innocent parties. One or the other must lose, in this transaction, this substantial sum. Since the defendant indorsed the notes and thus created the situation which led to the sale and discounting of the notes, he must suffer the loss. It is the law that when a loss is sustained which must be borne by one of two innocent parties, it will fall upon him whose acts occasioned the loss even though he be free from actual fault, but especially if it occurs through his negligence by imposing undue confidence in another. This doctrine is founded upon the theory that in delegating his trust to another who proved false, he has created a relationship tantamount to that of an agency which he may not refute. 3 R. C. L. 999, § 209.

[5] The notes do not provide specifically for interest. Under such circumstances, in the absence of any provision to the contrary the holder is entitled to recover the legal rate of interest from the date of maturity, which in the state of California is 7 per cent. per annum. 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1384, Act 3757; 14 Cal. Jur. 681, § 7.

[6] It follows that the findings of knowledge of the infirmities of the notes and fraud on the part of the appellant are unsupported by the pleadings or evidence, and should be disregarded. Since the condition upon which the notes were to be discounted was not made an issue by the pleadings upon which the case was actually tried, we must assume that the record shows without conflict that the appellant was the holder of the notes in due course; that they were unpaid and the non-payment thereof duly protested; and that the bank is therefore entitled to recover the full amount of $45,000, together with the legal rate of interest thereon from November 9, 1925, which was the date of maturity. The valid findings of the court will support this judgment.

The judgment is modified accordingly, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of appellant for $45,000, with 7 per cent. interest thereon from November 9, 1925, together with costs of trial and costs on appeal.

(Civ. 3910.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 29, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨110—Finding that stockholders purchased shares through representations that land, not yet paid for, was owned by company in fee, held not to warrant conclusion of promoters' fraud.

Finding that stockholders, suing to cancel capital stock issued in return for land contract, had purchased their stock through inducement of advertisements and solicitors, and were misled and deceived by statements that company owned land in fee, on which oil prospecting was to be done, whereas deed had not been delivered or whole of purchase price paid, did not warrant conclusion of fraud of promoters, for want of finding that plaintiffs were induced to make purchase by false representation, and that representation was sole reason for buying the stock.

2. Fraud ⇨3—Conclusion of "fraud" must be based on findings of defendant's intent to deceive, knowledge of falsity of representations, and that plaintiff relied thereon and was injured.

To support conclusion of actual "fraud," there should be findings of ultimate facts showing intent to deceive, that representations were known to be false by the party making them, and were actually false, and were representations of facts, and that plaintiff relied thereon and was injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Fraud.]

3. Corporations ⇨30(2)—Promoters occupy fiduciary relation towards corporation and persons becoming stockholders.

Promoters occupy fiduciary relation or relation of trust and confidence towards corporation and persons becoming stockholders, and must act with utmost good faith in their dealings with corporation.

4. Corporations ⇨30(4)—Promoters, choosing directors to represent company in proposed purchase of property, must select competent, trustworthy, and independent persons.

Promoters, given power of selecting directors to represent company in purchase of property under scheme of organization, must select competent, trustworthy, and independent persons, who will act honestly in the interests of the stockholders.

5. Corporations ⇨110—Stockholders could have stock issue canceled to extent stock exceeded value of property received by new corporation in exchange, where stock was issued promoters by dummy directors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by J. S. Lewis and others against the Elk Hills 36 Oil Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. L. Carnahan, of Los Angeles, and F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Wiley & Harvey, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. Elk Hills 36 Oil Company is a California corporation, with an authorized capital of $500,000, divided into 500,000 shares, of the par value of $1. Prior to its incorporation Rose L. Burcham was the owner of certain property in Kern county, and while so the owner she gave A. W. Mason the right to purchase the property for the sum of $20,000, $10,000 payable in cash, the balance on deferred payments, a deed to be placed in escrow, and to be delivered when the total purchase price had been paid. Upon the execution of the contract Mason induced the defendants Foster and Johnstone to lend them financial assistance in raising the initial payment of $10,000, and through their joint efforts the first payment of $10,000 was made and the deed placed in escrow. Apparently unable to raise further money among themselves to meet the deferred payment, they decided to organize a corporation for the purpose of raising the balance of $10,000 due upon the property, and also to obtain funds to prospect the land for oil and gas.

Accordingly Mason, Johnstone, and Foster, through what is commonly known as dummy directors, caused a corporation to be organized, known as Elk Hills 36 Oil Company. These directors, during their incumbency, passed a resolution wherein it was resolved that the corporation should purchase from L. Dorritt Mason, who was the wife of A. W. Mason, the latter's contract with Rose L. Burcham, and in exchange therefor the corporation should issue to her 300,000 shares of its capital stock, and the residue thereof, to wit, 200,000, should be sold at par. Application was made to the commissioner of corporations for permission to so dispose of its stock, and approval thereof obtained. Accordingly, 300,000 shares were issued to Mrs. Mason for her transfer of the contracts to the corporation. Thereafter these qualifying directors resigned, and the defendants Mason, Johnstone, Peairs, Flickinger, and Jameson were elected in their stead. At no time did Mason disclose to Peairs, Johnstone, or Flickinger the amount of the contract price for the land, and at no time did these defendants pay in the aggregate on account of the purchase price of this land any sum in excess of $10,000, and at the time of the transfer of the contract to the corporation the court found the fair, reasonable value of the land did not exceed $20,000.

The court also found that whatever Mrs. Mason did in the matter of transferring her interests in the contract was done at the request and for the benefit of Mason and his copromoters, and it was further found that neither Peairs nor Flickinger paid or invested anything of value toward the development of the corporation, and that whatever these two directors should receive for their services in co-operating in the formation of the corporation should be paid them out of whatever share of stock Mason would receive from the corporation for the transfer of his interest in the land to the corporation.

As a result of a sales campaign something over 38,000 shares were sold at par to various individuals, among whom were plaintiffs, who bring this action upon behalf of the corporation to have all shares issued to Mrs. Mason in excess of 10,000 canceled. Plaintiffs prevailed in the trial court and defendants appeal.

[1, 2] Respondents urge that the defendants occupied such a position of trust toward the corporation as to forbid the transaction set forth above, and also that defendants induced them by fraudulent representations to become purchasers of the stock, the representation complained of being that the corporation owned the land in fee, whereas, in fact, there was due upon the purchase price thereof the sum of $10,000. As to the latter objection the court found the facts to be:

"That upon the appointment and election of the defendants A. W. Mason, M. P. Flickinger, W. A. Johnstone, H. A. Peairs, and J. W. Jameson, said company, through and by its said board of directors, commenced a campaign for the sale of the unissued portion of its capital stock through published advertisements and solicitors, and that these plaintiffs purchased shares of the capital stock of the said company at the price of one ($1.00) dollar per share, through the inducement of said advertisements and said solicitors, but that these plaintiffs were not informed through said advertisements or through said solicitors of the amount of stock issued in exchange for said contract to purchase said land, but were misled and deceived by statements of said advertisements and solicitors that said company owned said land in fee, whereas, at the time of the purchase of stock by these plaintiffs, said deed had not been delivered to said L. Dorritt Mason, and no deed of said premises had been made or delivered to said company, and that said balance of said purchase price, to-wit, ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars, still remained unpaid, and that each of said plaintiffs in the purchase of his stock in said company relied on said statement that said company owned said land in fee."

This finding falls short of the necessary elements upon which the court could base a conclusion of fraud. As appellants point out and as is set forth in 12 California Jurisprudence, 839, under "Fraud and Deceit":

"Findings of merely probative facts bearing upon the question of actual fraud do not show a case of actual fraud as defined by the Code; there should be findings of ultimate facts, such as that there was an intent to deceive the plaintiff or to induce him to act, that the misrepresentations were known to be false by the party making them, or were made in a manner not warranted by his information, that such representations were actually false, that they were representations as to facts, and not mere matters of opinion, that the plaintiff believed and relied upon the false statements and was induced solely thereby to give his consent to the contract, and that he was injured."

[3-5] The court did not in the case at bar find plaintiffs were by the acts induced to make the purchase of stock or that such representations were the sole reason for them buying the stock, also the question of what is meant by ownership in fee is not free from doubt. We do not believe that the findings of the trial court, nor the evidence taken at the trial and set forth in the record before us, justifies a conclusion that plaintiffs' purchase of stock was induced by fraudulent representations. And this is so, whether an attempt is made to recover for the individual purchaser, or, as here, to cancel the excessive issuance of stock to defendants. We believe, however, that the relationship of the defendants toward the corporation at the time of the transfer of the contract to the corporation was such as to justify the complaint of the respondents.

Appellants attempt to find support for their action in the case of Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 P. 444, 446. In that case Mr. Justice Garoutte, speaking for the court, quotes with approval the case of Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43, and holds that the application of the principles of law therein declared furnishes the legal solution of the case then being considered. In that case it is said, in quoting from the case of Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, supra:

"There are two principles applicable to all partnerships or associations for a common purpose of trade or business, which appear to be well settled on reason and authority. The first is that any man or number of men, who are the owners of any kind of property, real or personal, may form a partnership or association with others, and sell the property to the association at any price that may be agreed upon between them, no matter what it may have originally cost, provided there is no fraudulent misrepresentation made by the vendors to their associates. They are not bound to disclose the profit which they may realize by the transaction. * * * The second principle is that where persons form such an association, or begin or start the project of one, from that time they do stand in a confidential relation to each other, and to all others who may subsequently become members or subscribers, and it is not competent for any of them to purchase property for the purpose of such a company, and then sell it at an advance, without a full disclosure of the facts."

This principle of law is not determinative of the issues here, as appellants contend, for the reason that appellant Mason and his co-promoters were not dealing with an independent board of directors, but with mere figure-heads placed upon the board as puppets of the promoters, and solely for the purpose of effecting the organization and voting the issuance of a block of stock to Mason and thereupon tendering their resignations, which was done. Inasmuch as a corporation can act only through its board of directors, the principle of law laid down in the cases cited must presuppose consideration by an independent board of directors, and not the act of a board which is the creation of the promoters.

Appellants Mason and Johnstone were clearly promoters of the Elk Hills 36 Oil Company, and as such occupied a peculiar relation towards the corporation, which they brought into being, as well as towards other persons who, on their invitation and solicitation, became members of the body which they created. They occupy in these respects a fiduciary relation, or a relation of trust and confidence, and the utmost good faith is required of them in their dealings with the corporation. In those cases where the scheme of organization gives the promoters the power of selecting the directors who are to represent the company in the proposed purchase, they are bound to select competent, trustworthy, and independent persons, who will act honestly in the interests of the stockholders. Dickerman et al. v. Northern Trust Co. et al., 176 U. S. 181, 20 S. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423.

We think it unnecessary to pass upon other points urged by appellants, for it is evident that, without an independent board of directors, appellants cannot bring themselves within the rule urged by them. And the evidence clearly discloses, and the trial court explicitly finds, that defendants did not deal with an independent board of directors, but that, in the formation of said corporation, said defendants and E. L. Foster used and employed certain named persons to act as the incorporators and as members of the first board of directors of said corporation, and that all of said persons named did not at any time ever have any interest whatever in said real estate or in said corporation or in any stock thereof, but acted solely and only as dummy directors for the benefit of and at the direction of said defendants and said E. L. Foster.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 722½—Statement of district attorney held not objectionable as leading jury to believe that defendant not only set fires involved in case, but had set another fire to collect insurance.

3. Criminal law ☞369(11)—Evidence held not objectionable as causing jury to believe that defendant not only set fires involved, but had set another fire to collect insurance.

In prosecution for setting fire to barns, admitting statement made by defendant in which he stated he received insurance money paid on account of loss of hotel by fire and map showing location of hotel held not objectionable as causing jury to believe that defendant not only set fires involved in case, but had set another fire for purpose of collecting insurance.

4. Criminal law ☞512—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice held insufficient to warrant conviction for setting fire to barns to obtain insurance money.

Uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice was not sufficient to warrant conviction in prosecution for setting fire to barns to obtain the insurance money.

6. Criminal law ☞1169(2)—Admitting witness' testimony regarding conversation with accomplice before defendant had hired accomplice to burn building, although error, held not prejudicial; similar evidence being before court without objection.

In prosecution for burning barns to obtain insurance money, admitting testimony of witness regarding conversation with accomplice before defendant had hired accomplice to set fire to building, although error, held not prejudicial, where testimony was but milder statement of what was brought out on defendant's cross-examination of the accomplice and verdict of guilty was amply warranted by evidence.

District Court of Appeal could not review alleged intemperate language used by district attorney in his argument to jury in prosecution for setting fire to barns, made in reply to statements of counsel for defendant, where transcript did not contain statements as required by Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 2, § 7.

Appeal from Superior Court, Trinity County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Harold H. Bragdon was convicted of burning two insured barns with intent to defraud insurer, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. C. Smith and Arthur M. Dean, both of Redding, and John S. Reid, of Weaverville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of burning two insured barns on the Bragdon ranch in Trinity county with the intent to defraud the insurer. This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and the order denying a new trial.

The barns are referred to as the "upper barn" and the "lower barn," each of which was insured against loss by fire in the sum of $1,000. The prosecution did not contend that the defendant personally set fire to the barns, but that he hired Lloyd Clayton Smith to do so. Smith was residing on the ranch with his family at the time of the fire, but the defendant was outside the county. The barns were burned between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning of February 27, 1929.

Smith testified that he was hired by the defendant to burn the barns in the latter part of January, 1929, or the early part of February. He further testified: "I was working in the mine there. * * * Bragdon, he comes out with a mining man by the name of Kaufman, I believe, and Charlie Heath. They was looking the mine over, and I went around with him a little while. Finally I went back to work * * * and pretty soon Bragdon came down to where I was working. We talked around a little bit about the mine. He wanted to know how I was getting along, how much I was taking. I wasn't making much, maybe a dollar or so a day. I don't know everything that he said. He asked me if I wanted to make a proposition. 'Well,' I said, 'I don't know. I might.' I happened to think of a conversation I had with another party before that about the fires, so I just thought I would try it on him. I asked him what he wanted me to do, burn the barns? * * * He said, 'How much do you want?' I said, 'Three or four hundred dollars.' He said that was too much, that he wouldn't pay it. * * * He said he thought the insurance was taken off, or part was off, * * * or outlawed, or something to that effect. * * * He finally offered me $200 and pay my grocery bill. * * * Then he * * * said he would give me $250 cash if I did the job, and while we were talking we fixed up kind of a code like, so he would let me know to do the job, but he wanted to wait till he got the upper barn insured. * * * When he got it fixed up, he would let me know. If he sent word for me to go ahead and fix the upstairs, that was to set the barn off across from the cottage; if he told me to go ahead with the drift, that was to touch the upper barn off." February 20th the defendant mailed a registered letter at Woodland directed to "Mr. L. C. Smith, % Bragdon Ranch, Lewiston, Calif." The letter was delivered to Smith February 24th. Smith testified that the envelope contained two letters, one signed by the defendant and the other unsigned. Both were shown to be in the defendant's handwriting and were introduced in evidence. The unsigned letter reads as follows:

"Mr. L. C. Smith—Dear Sir: That has been taking off of everything but upper barn and it will take me time to get fixed up again so get it at once. That is the one towards Rush Creek by wagon shed and not the one you wanted to get. There is $1,000 on it and $100 to you and we will get the other later. My men will be up in the next day or two so get this fixed at once and don't say a thing to Charley. If they don't take it over I am going to start it up myself as soon as we get this money and you can have a job. It will only take 10 or 12 days to get it. * * * We can make a good job of things later but there is a lot of red tape to go through and it will take a long time to get it fixed and I want to put on more where it will pay both of us. I will send another letter giving you orders to move so you can show Paulsen what the letter was you rec. so he will know what I wrote you about and won't suspect anything wrong so be sure and show it to him and Charley. Burn this up as soon as you get it."

On February 23 the defendant wired Smith: "Party coming Monday have Mead tunnel cleaned and go ahead with drift."

Smith further testified that about February 25th the defendant arrived at the Bragdon ranch; that the witness there said to the defendant, "I didn't get your letter until this morning," and that the defendant replied that "he had the other barn fixed up now, to go ahead and do the whole job; said he would give me $300 and he only had two or three days left now on the insurance on the barns, and I only had two or three days to do the job in." Smith explained his reason for not burning the letter as follows: "After I done the job, I just got to thinking that I might need that to force payment out of him." He testified that he put the unsigned letter "in a tobacco can and hid it out back of the woodshed." After he had admitted to the sheriff of the county that he had burned the barns, he also stated that he had hidden the letter in the manner stated. The sheriff thereupon went to the Bragdon ranch and found the letter at the place indicated.

[1] The court excused a juror for cause on the ground that one of the attorneys for defendant was attorney for the juror in a pending civil action. Appellant contends that this was prejudicial error. There is no merit in the contention. People v. Malone, 68 Cal. App. 615, 617, 229 P. 1000.

[2, 3] The defendant's mother was the owner of the Bragdon ranch. In his opening statement to the jury the district attorney stated that he would prove that at the time of the fire taxes on the ranch were delinquent to the amount of $5,000 or $6,000; that "in July, 1928, there had been a hotel building on the premises, but that burned and that there was considerable insurance on the hotel building * * * and that the defendant * * * received a substantial portion thereof." A map of the premises, on which appeared a black space to indicate the location of the hotel, was admitted in evidence. A statement, made by the defendant, was introduced in evidence, in which he stated that he received the sum of $1,500 out of the insurance money paid on account of the loss of the hotel. Appellant contends that such statement by the district attorney was prejudicial misconduct and that the admission of the map and defendant's statement constituted reversible error, on the ground that the natural effect thereof was to cause the jury "to believe that the defendant not only set the fires involved in this case, but had set another fire for the purpose of collecting the insurance." There is nothing in the statement of the district attorney or in the evidence referred to which indicates that the fire of July, 1928, was of incendiary origin. It appears rather that the district attorney was attempting to prove that the defendant had a motive for burning the barns, on the theory that, having received part of the insurance money when the hotel was burned, he hoped to receive a part of the insurance money on the burning of the barns.

[4] It is true, of course, that Smith's testimony alone, he being an accomplice, is insufficient to warrant a conviction; but the unsigned letter, proved by independent testimony to be in the defendant's handwriting, strongly tends to connect him with the commission of the crime and amply corroborates Smith's testimony. The telegram mentioned also tends to corroborate such testimony.

Counsel for defendant cross-examined Smith in part as follows:

"Q. Then you, out of a clear sky, in response to a statement of the defendant in this case, said right, without any previous conversation, 'What do you want me to do? Burn your barns down?' Is that what happened? A. I had another conversation with another party before that."

On redirect examination, the following occurred:

"Q. * * * You said * * * when he asked you to make a proposition, that you said, 'Do you want me to burn your barns?' * * * Why did you say that? A. Well, just conversation with Harley Mead one time up at my place.

"Q. What was that?

"Mr. Smith: Objected to as hearsay, as to this defendant, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Talking about the other fire, and Mead talking about it, he said, 'It is a wonder that Bragdon has not tried to make a proposition to you to burn his barns down, by now.' I said, 'Maybe he will.' That's where I got the idea, and when he talked about a proposition it flashed through my mind that's what he wanted to talk about, so I said it."

On recross-examination the witness was examined as follows:

"Q. Now then, you gave certain portions of testimony, or conversation that you had with Harley Mead. Will you give the rest of that conversation? A. He was staying there. He was boarding at my place at the time, we were talking about the fire, and he said, 'People figured that he had the big house burned down.' He said the barn caught fire across the way and somebody put it out, and he came out there and was kind of mad that they didn't let the barns go at the same time that the big house did.

"Q. Who said that? Harley Mead? A. Harley Mead, yes.

"Q. What did you say? A. I don't remember, I didn't know anything about it."

Harley Mead was called as a witness by the prosecution and examined as follows:

"Q. Do you remember having a talk with him (Smith) in regards to the sentiment of certain persons or people in Lewiston in regard to the burning of the hotel?

"Mr. Smith: We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial and hearsay.
* * *

"The Court: Overruled. * * *

"A. I have a faint recollection of speaking to him something about some people made the remark that they thought that he either set it himself or had someone set it."

[5, 6] No attempt is made by the respondent to justify the overruling of the aforesaid objections of the defendant, and it does not appear upon what theory the rulings can be upheld. At the trial the district attorney said, in relation to the testimony offered: "It is not hearsay for the reason that the conspiracy has not been concluded until the insurance money has been paid." The answer to this argument is that there is not the slightest evidence of the existence of a conspiracy at the time to which the testimony relates, Smith's conversation with Mead having taken place prior to the time at which the defendant first broached the subject of burning the barns to Smith, according to the uncontradicted evidence of the prosecution. It is to be observed, however, that the most damaging part of the objectionable evidence was elicited by counsel for the defendant in the cross-examination of Smith and that Mead's testimony is but a milder statement of what was brought out on such cross-examination. A witness was permitted to testify, over the defendant's objection, that in a conversation at which the defendant was not present, the defendant's mother "stated there was around $5,000 in taxes on the place." This evidence was clearly hearsay and inadmissible, but the same fact was clearly proved by other testimony which was not objectionable. The other errors in the admission and rejection of evidence are of minor importance and need not be specifically discussed.

While under other circumstances the errors referred to might require a reversal, it cannot be said in this case that they have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The defendant neglected to become a witness, and while this fact cannot in any manner affirmatively prejudice his case (Pen. Code § 1323), his failure to testify leaves the most damaging evidence given against him wholly uncontradicted. Not only does Smith's testimony in relation to the conspiracy and the agreement as to a "code" for secret communications from the defendant stand uncontradicted, but the independent testimony to the effect that the defendant wrote the unsigned letter and sent the "code" telegram is likewise uncontradicted and the statements therein are unexplained. Under such circumstances only a most credulous jury would return a verdict of not guilty.

[7] Complaint is made of intemperate language used by the district attorney in his argument to the jury, made in reply to statements of counsel for the defendant. The transcript does not contain such statements, as required by rule 2, section 7, of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, and in the absence thereof this court is left in the dark as to the provocation, if any, which induced the district attorney to use the language of which complaint is made. The language so used is not of such character as to constitute prejudicial misconduct if the provocation was great.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

JONES v. BARION. (Civ. 7066.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 2, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1930.

1. Automobiles $\Rightarrow$ 244(6)—Jury was justified in finding driver of automobile negligent, where pedestrian struck by car was just beyond middle of street and driver's windshield was hazy.

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian, struck by automobile when crossing street after advancing only a few feet beyond the middle of the street, evidence which showed that defendant's windshield was hazy and that he could see only a few feet from the wiper warranted jury's finding of defendant's negligence because of condition of windshield and failure to see plaintiff or because of having swung out too far to left.

2. Automobiles $\Rightarrow$ 245(72)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian struck while crossing street, after failing to see automobile approaching, held for jury.

In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained when struck by defendant's automobile, while attempting to cross street, plaintiff's contributory negligence held question of fact for jury, where he testified that he looked in both directions before entering and while crossing street, though he failed to hear or see defendant's car.

3. Automobiles $\Rightarrow$ 245(72)—Pedestrian, run over by automobile which he failed to see, will not be held contributorily negligent as matter of law.

Pedestrian, who is run over by automobile in the street without first seeing car, cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

4. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 296(4, 5)—Instruction that there is no positive duty to stop, look, and listen in crossing street held not reversible error, in view of entire charge.

In pedestrian's action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, instruction that there is no positive duty to stop, look, and listen when pedestrian is about to cross city street, and that neither pedestrian nor automobile has superior right of way, and that each is entitled to use highway, held not reversible error as leading jury to believe pedestrian was under no duty to look or listen, in view of context of instruction and other instructions relative to contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by William Jones against Christian O. Barion. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff obtained a verdict and judgment for damages for personal injuries sustained by being struck by defendant's automobile. Defendant appeals. He attacks the sufficiency of the evidence and complains of the giving of one instruction.

[1] The evidence shows that the respondent after dark walked westerly from Second towards Third street upon the north sidewalk of Folsom street in San Francisco. At the northeast corner of Third and Folsom streets, a building was under course of construction. Building material obstructed the sidewalk and also a part of Folsom street almost out to the nearest of the street car tracks. This obstruction extended towards Second street from Third street a distance of from 75 to 125 feet. When respondent arrived at this obstruction, he turned out into the street and continued as if to cross to the south side of Folsom street. When he was a few feet beyond the middle of the street (according to his version) he was knocked unconscious by the appellant's automobile. He had heard and seen nothing of appellant's automobile before that, although he said he had looked in both directions before entering and while crossing the street. Appellant testified that he was proceeding at a moderate speed astride the northern or his most right-hand street car rail and saw nothing of the respondent except the flash of a shadow before the impact. He testified:

"Q. What was the condition of the weather on that night? A. Well, my machine was on the outside of the boat (he had shortly before crossed the bay on the ferry boat from Oakland) and the windshield was hazy. I had a hand wiper, I could only see, I should judge, about a few feet, just from the wiper. The right-hand side of the wiper was all hazy and the bottom of the windshield was hazy.

"Q. What was the condition of the weather in San Francisco? A. It was like a high fog, when you drove you would pick up a little moisture on the windshield."

Appellant also testified that his lights were lit; that his automobile had already passed the first part of the obstruction and had reached a point about 40 feet from Third street before the right-hand part of the front of his automobile struck respondent. Both appellant and respondent testified to the effect that the atmospheric visibility was good.

Under the evidence outlined, the jury would have been warranted in finding the appellant negligent for the condition of his windshield and his failure to see respondent or for his having swung out too far to his left. We should add here that a police officer corroborated the respondent as to the place of the impact by locating the place in the street where respondent lay unconscious.

[2, 3] Contributory negligence under the evidence was a question of fact for the jury. According to respondent's testimony, he exercised a great deal of care before entering and while in the street. No witness was able to contradict him, for no one saw him. Appellant argues that respondent either looked negligently or negligently failed to look for automobiles, and therefore urges this court to hold that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The facts of this case are not clear enough for that. We cannot say as a matter of law respondent was negligent in not seeing appellant's automobile approach and in failing to avoid it. The rights of the pedestrian and the motorist are reciprocal. To apply the principle contended for to the usual automobile-pedestrian case, such as this is, would have the effect of subordinating the rights of the pedestrian to that of the motorist. To discard respondent's testimony that he looked, because of the assumption that, if he looked, he would have seen appellant's automobile, fully lighted, approaching at a moderate rate of speed on the west-bound track and that he would have been able, with the exercise of ordinary care, to avoid being struck, would simply be to discard respondent's testimony and accept the appellant's. We have only the testimony of the appellant for the manner of the approach of his automobile. We cannot say as a matter of law that a pedestrian who is run over by an automobile in the street without first seeing it is guilty of contributory negligence.

[4] Complaint is made of the first sentence of instruction No. XXXII. This instruction began as follows: "There is no positive duty to stop, look and listen when a pedestrian is about to cross a city street. (1) The law is that neither the pedestrian nor the automobile has a superior right of way, and that each is entitled to use the highway, and that the conduct of both must be regulated with reference to this fundamental rule. * * * Appellant says: "It is entirely superfluous to any possible issue, and should not have been given. If superfluity were its only fault the giving of it might possibly not be ground for reversal, but it contains the additional fault of conveying to the jury the idea that there was no duty on Jones to either look or listen or to use the senses that he had to discover the approach of danger."

The sentence was not a necessary part of the instructions in this case. However, we do not agree with appellant that this sentence, taken in connection with the sentence immediately following it, could have misled the jury. The court stated that there was no positive duty to stop, look and listen. This is not the same as stating that a pedestrian need never do any one of these three things. Moreover, in instruction No. LIII, the court affirmatively instructed that it was respondent's duty to look before entering the street, to continue to look, to right and to left, and to continue so to do. Instruction No. XXXII does not even technically conflict with instruction No. LIII unless we change the wording of the former. The instruction complained of was not reversible error in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 23, 1930.

1. Trial $\S$ 165—Motion for nonsuit admits truth of plaintiff's evidence and every legitimate inference therefrom, and on such motion evidence should be interpreted most strongly against defendants.

Motion for nonsuit admits truth of plaintiff's evidence and every inference which can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and on such motion evidence should be interpreted most strongly against party making motion.

2. Negligence $\S$ 93(1)—Guest, riding in rear seat of automobile when struck by train, having no power or control over driver or automobile, cannot be contributorily negligent.

Guest, riding in automobile in rear seat when struck by train at crossing, having no power or control over driver or automobile, and never attempting to exercise any, cannot be held contributorily negligent, since under such circumstances negligence of driver cannot be imputed to guest.

3. Automobiles $\S$ 224(3)—Railroads $\S$ 327 (12)—Guest, riding in rear seat and having no power or control over driver or automobile, held not required to warn driver of approaching danger of collision at railroad crossing.

Guest, riding in rear seat of automobile, having absolutely no power or control over driver or automobile, and never attempting to exercise any, held not required to warn driver of approaching danger of collision at crossing.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 242(8)—Railroads $\S$ 346(5)—Presumption exists that guest in rear seat of automobile used due care and caution for his own protection.

Presumption exists that guest, riding in rear seat of automobile and killed when automobile was struck by train at railroad crossing, used due care and caution for his own protection, and did all that was reasonably required.

5. Automobiles $\S$ 245(87)—Railroads $\S$ 350 (21)—Riding in automobile driven by man with only one eye held not contributory negligence as matter of law.

Riding in automobile driven by man with only one eye held not contributory negligence as matter of law.

6. Automobiles ⇨224(3)—Railroads ⇨327 (12)—That driver of automobile was blind in one eye was mere fact to be considered with all other facts and circumstances in determining contributory negligence of guest.

In action for damages for death in railroad crossing collision of guest, against driver of automobile and railroad, fact that driver was blind in one eye held merely a fact to be considered by jury with all other facts and circumstances in determining whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.

7. Automobiles ⇨245(87)—Railroads ⇨350 (21)—Contributory negligence of guest, riding in rear seat of automobile when struck by train at crossing, held for jury.

In action for death of guest riding in rear seat of automobile, which was struck by train at crossing, deceased's contributory negligence held question of fact for jury.

8. Automobiles ⇨245(24)—Railroads ⇨350 (22)—Negligence of driver of automobile, struck by train at crossing, held for jury under testimony showing country was strange, that view was obstructed, and he saw nothing.

In action for death of guest riding in rear seat of automobile, which was struck by train at crossing, negligence of driver held question of fact for jury, where he testified he was unacquainted with country and road, and did not see warning signs or railroad tracks or engine, and heard no signal, and that view was obstructed.

9. Negligence ⇨93(1)—Heirs of guest riding in automobile struck by train could recover against railroad, if negligent, notwithstanding driver's negligence.

Though driver of automobile may have been guilty of negligence as matter of law at time of collision with train at crossing, if railroad was guilty of negligence proximately causing death, heirs of decedent, who was guest in automobile, would not be barred from recovery, since negligence of driver could not, under such circumstances, be imputed to guest.

In action for damages for death of guest riding in rear seat of automobile when struck by train at crossing, conflicting testimony regarding giving of signal by train when approaching crossing held to present question of fact for jury whether signals were given.

Decision of trial court and jury on amount of damages cannot be set aside, unless verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption.

15. Death ⇨99(4)—$35,000 for death of husband and father 42 years old, in good health, with annual income over $4,000 and life expectancy over 26 years, held not excessive.

$35,000 to two minor children and wife for death of husband and father 42 years of age, in good health, with proven income of from $4,000 to $5,000 per annum, and an expectancy of life of 26.72, years, and contributing from $250 to $300 per month to children and wife held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Betty Krause and another, minors, by their guardian ad litem, Lena Krause, and another, against John W. Rarity and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named Rarity and Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company separately appeal. Affirmed.

Leo J. McEnerney, of San Francisco, and Ray W. Hays, of Fresno, for appellant Rarity.

Robert Brennan, M. W. Reed, E. T. Lucey, Leo E. Sievert, and H. K. Lockwood, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendants John W. Rarity and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, a corporation, from a judgment entered against them upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $35,000. Plaintiffs are the wife and two minor children, who are the sole heirs, of William Krause, deceased, and they brought this action, charging that William Krause's death was due to negligence of the defendants John W. Rarity and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company.

On September 12, 1927, at about the hour of 6 o'clock p. m., said William Krause and one

O. E. Orr were guests and passengers of the defendant John W. Rarity in his Jewett coach automobile. Rarity was driving said automobile in a westerly direction along a public highway in Fresno county known as "Central Avenue," which is a rural highway, paved and practically level. Across said highway the appellant Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company owned and operated a railroad track and railroad, extending in a northerly and southerly direction, and known as "Mattie Spur." The country surrounding the place where the collision occurred is practically level. The railway track was about one foot lower than the paved highway. At the time of the accident there was a ditch about 3 feet high on the north side of Central avenue and parallel thereto. Upon this bank there was at the time a growth of foliage, which varied in height from 1 to 5 feet. For a quarter of a mile immediately east of the railway there was at the time of the accident a grape vineyard. The rows in this vineyard, which extended in an easterly direction, were about 6 feet high and the vines were in full foliage.

About 12 or 14 feet east of the railway tracks, and about 12 feet north of the highway, there was a standard railroad crossing sign. It consists of an upright post, approximately 10 feet high, painted white, and at the top of which are two crossarms, painted white, with the words "Railroad Crossing" in large black letters thereon. About 300 feet east of the railroad and 20 feet north of the highway there was a smaller sign, a target sign, consisting of an upright post 6 feet high, at the top of which is a metal disc about two feet in diameter, with the letters "R R" in black on a white background. One of the witnesses testified that this sign, at the time of the accident, was hidden by weeds. There was, at the time of the accident, one tree on the north line of the highway, about 70 feet east of the track. This tree stands 20 feet high and is approximately 12 feet across the spread of its branches. On the south line of the highway, east of the tracks, was a row of olive trees that came within about 28 feet of the railroad tracks.

As said automobile was attempting to cross said spur track it was struck by a locomotive of the appellant Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, and as a result of said collision the said William Krause received injuries from which he died almost instantly.

Plaintiffs allege that the death of William Krause was caused by the negligence and careless operation and handling of the automobile by defendant John W. Rarity, and contributory thereto and concurrent therewith the negligence and carelessness of defendant Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company in so operating and conducting its locomotive as to drive the same toward and upon said highway crossing without giving or sounding any warning whatsoever of the approach thereof, either by sounding a whistle, bell, or otherwise.

The defendants and appellants filed separate answers and have also prosecuted separate appeals.

The appellant railway company in its answer interposed a general denial, and further pleaded as an affirmative defense that the injuries to and death of said William Krause were contributed to and proximately caused by his own negligence in this: That at all times after said William Krause came within 300 feet of said crossing, the locomotive and train of defendant railway company, which was approaching said crossing, were plainly visible, and the noise of the train and engine were plainly audible to said William Krause, and that said William Krause did not look for any train that might be approaching upon defendant railway company's track, and did not warn or caution the driver of said automobile that said automobile was approaching a railway track, and should be operated cautiously and under control, and did not listen for the noise of any train that might be approaching said crossing.

As a further and separate defense to said complaint said railway company alleged that the collision and injuries to and the death of said William Krause were contributed to and proximately caused by his own negligence in this: That he permitted the driver of said automobile to operate the same at a high rate of speed as the same approached the railway crossing and as said William Krause knew that said automobile was so approaching said crossing, and said William Krause so allowed the said automobile to be driven at a high and dangerous rate of speed to and upon the said crossing without cautioning or warning the driver of said machine to approach said crossing with his machine under control, with an opportunity to look for and listen for any train or engine that might be approaching said crossing.

The answer and defense of John W. Rarity was substantially as follows: That at the time of the collision he was operating his automobile with reasonable care and at a lawful and proper rate of speed; that he did not know of the existence of the railway track, or of the fact that a railway track crossed Central avenue; that he did not hear or see the locomotive until it was too late for him to avoid collision with it; that he did not know of the approach of the locomotive, because of the fact that no whistle was blown or bell rung, and because of the fact that the foliage upon the north side of Central avenue obscured the locomotive from his view; that he had only one eye, and that by reason thereof his vision was limited; that, because of the fact that the setting sun was directly in the line of his vision, he watched the highway directly ahead of him, and that because of the position of the sun he could not and did not see the railway sign; and that, as he was at that time driving in a rural district, he was driving at a lawful and proper rate of speed, to wit, 30 miles an hour. Appellant Rarity contended throughout the trial that, because of the conditions outlined, the burden was cast upon respondents to show that he was negligent in operating his automobile, under the circumstances shown by the evidence.

The appellant railway company first contends that the court erred in denying its motion for a nonsuit. In support of this contention it is argued, first, that deceased, William Krause, was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; second, "the accident was solely and proximately caused by the negligence of defendant Rarity."

[1, 2] In considering whether or not the motion was properly denied, it is important to keep in mind the court's power and limitations with reference to the granting of nonsuits. The motion admits the truth of plaintiffs' evidence and every inference which can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the party making the motion, which in the case at bar would be the appellant railway company. Stieglitz v. Settle, 175 Cal. 131, 165 P. 436; Goldstone v. Merchants Ice & Cold Storage Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 P. 776; Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252; Bloom v. Allen, 61 Cal. App. 28, 214 P. 481; Bakos v. Shell Oil Co. of California (Cal. App.) 271 P. 127; Gregg v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553. In the light of the foregoing well-established rules, let us examine first the evidence touching the alleged contributory negligence of the deceased. The evidence is undisputed that William Krause, the deceased, was a guest of John W. Rarity, and at the time of the accident was sitting in the rear seat of Rarity's automobile, and had absolutely no power or control over Rarity or the automobile in which he was riding, and never attempted to exercise any. Under such circumstances alone Krause could not be held guilty of contributory negligence, for the law is well settled in this state that the negligence of the driver of the machine cannot be imputed to a passenger therein, in the absence of any evidence showing that the latter exercised some control over the driver, or that he possessed the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385; Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 171 P. 1059; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319; Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 529, 530. Therefore, if deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, it must have been some act either of commission or omission on his part, other than being a mere guest of Rarity, which of itself constituted contributory negligence. There is, however, no evidence in the record tending to show any such act of negligence on the part of the deceased.

[3] It is argued by the defendant railway company that the railroad signs, track, and engine were open and visible to deceased, and that he should have warned Rarity of the approaching danger, etc. Practically the same contention was made in the case of Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Company, supra, and there the Supreme Court said:

"This argument, we think, is satisfactorily and completely answered by the following statement of the law on this subject, found in 3 Cal. Jur. pp. 853 and 854: 'A passenger in a motor vehicle approaching a railway crossing is under no legal obligation to warn the driver, either of the presence of the tracks or of an approaching train; the view being unobstructed and the driver reasonably competent and vigilant. And, while it is the passenger's duty to look and listen, it is not his duty to stop for a successful observation, since he has no authority over the driver, but is wholly subject to the latter's action. The passenger has a right to suppose that the driver, on approaching a railway crossing with which he is familiar, will exercise due care for the protection and safety of his passengers, and that, even when so near the crossing as to be in apparent danger of collision with an on-coming train, he will or may take some action which will avert an accident. Nor is the passenger obliged, even when the danger of collision becomes suddenly imminent, to displace the driver, seize the operating levers, and endeavor to avoid the impending catastrophe. Nevertheless, it has been said that the passenger must look out for himself, and may not, in a place of danger, as on approaching a railway crossing, rely blindly on the driver. But a passenger in a machine operated by another cannot be said as a matter of law to have been negligent in not calling the chauffeur's attention to the danger of a collision.'"

The facts of the Marchetti Case are very similar to those in the case at bar, and we deem the foregoing a sufficient answer to the railway company's contention.

[4] Appellant railway company further insists that, if deceased had used ordinary care for his own safety, he would have seen and heard the locomotive and could have warned Rarity of the impending danger in time to have averted the accident, and, having failed to do so, was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. In support of this contention the following cases are cited: Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460; Thompson v. L. A., etc., Railway Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 P. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059. These cases, undoubtedly, contain a correct statement of the law upon the subject of a passenger's duty in case of known danger. They have little or no application to the case at bar, for the reason already stated, and for the additional reason that it does not appear that there was anything that could have been done by the deceased which would have averted the collision, had deceased seen the engine or track in time to have warned Rarity of the impending danger, and there is no assurance that the latter could have brought his machine to a stop before reaching the railroad tracks.

Furthermore, Rarity and Orr both testified that they did not see the crossing signs, or hear the engine, and that no bell was rung and no whistle blown. They were seated in the front seat of the automobile, and there is some evidence in the record that Rarity's view was somewhat obstructed. This testimony is some justification for assuming that deceased, who was in the rear seat of the automobile, did not hear the noise of the engine, or hear the bell or whistle, or see the cross signs, and also some evidence that the bell was not rung nor the whistle blown. Another witness, a lady living near by, also testified that no bell or whistle or other warning was given by the railroad engine. There is a presumption that deceased used due care and caution for his own protection, and did all that was reasonably required of him. There is no evidence in this case to overcome or dispel this presumption. See Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; also Shields v. King (Cal. Sup.) 277 P. 1043.

In Carpenter v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 51 Cal. App. 60, 195 P. 1073, 1075, the court said: "Conceding that deceased did see the approaching train and said nothing to the driver of the automobile or otherwise interfered with his operation thereof, nevertheless we cannot say as a matter of law that by reason of such omission he was guilty of negligence. * * * The sole ground upon which the negligence of deceased is predicated is the fact that he could, had he looked, have seen the approaching train, and therefore, argues respondent, he should in the exercise of ordinary care for his safety have done something to escape the result of the collision. This question, however, in view of the presumptions arising, is one of fact to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances in the case."

[5-7] Appellant railway company contends that deceased was guilty of negligence as a matter of law for riding in a car driven by a man with only one eye. No authority is cited in support of this contention. The only testimony in the case regarding Rarity's eyesight is that he lost his left eye some 16 years before the accident; that he had been driving an automobile for 8 or 9 years prior to the accident, and that so far as he knew his vision was not affected by the missing eye, and that the eyesight of the remaining eye was good. The fact that Rarity was blind in one eye was a fact to be considered by the jury with all the other facts and circumstances in the case, in determining whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. We cannot say as a matter of law that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. In view of all the facts and circumstances in the case, the question of contributory negligence on the part of deceased was one of fact to be determined by the jury.

[8] Neither can we say as a matter of law that "the accident was solely and proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant Rarity." Under the authority of such cases as Koster v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 788, Barnett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Co. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 443, Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 281 P. 681, and Young v. P. Elec. R. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 283 P. 61, and the physical facts as the railway company contends existed at the time of the collision, Rarity was undoubtedly guilty of negligence, as a matter of law. There are, however, several material differences between the facts in the above cited cases and the case at bar, as far as Rarity is concerned. For example: In the instant case, Rarity and Orr both testified they were unacquainted with the country and road, and did not see the warning signs or the railroad track or engine, and heard no signal, and that the view was obstructed in the manner above set forth. We are of the opinion that Rarity's negligence was also a question of fact for the jury.

[9, 10] However, the law is well settled that although Rarity, the driver of the car, may have been guilty of negligence as a matter of law, nevertheless, if the appellant railway company was guilty of negligence proximately causing the death of William Krause, the heirs of Krause, who was a guest of Rarity's in the car, would not be barred from a recovery, as such negligence of Rarity could not be, under the circumstances, imputed to Krause. This was also a question of fact for the jury. Baldwin v. Pacific Electric Railway Co. (Cal. Sup.) 281 P. 380. We conclude, therefore, that the trial court did not err in denying the motion for a nonsuit.

[11] The appellant railway company also contends that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of said appellant at the close of all the evidence. We are unable to agree with this contention. The law is well settled that a directed verdict is not authorized, where there is any conflict in the evidence of a substantial character. Kohn v. National Film Corporation, 60 Cal. App. 112, 212 P. 207; Estate of Fleming, 199 Cal. 750, 251 P. 637; Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 P. 267; Young v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., supra.

[12] In this case there is a decided conflict between the testimony of the employees of the railway company and the other witnesses as to whether or not a whistle was blown or a bell was rung at the crossing at the time of the accident. Rarity and Orr both testified that they heard none, and the witness Mrs. Koumarin, who lived near the crossing at the time of the accident, testified that there was no whistle blown or bell rung, and the engineer and fireman in the employ of appellant railway company testified that they blew the whistle and rang the bell. Under such circumstances, it was a question of fact for the jury to determine, and the court was not authorized to direct a verdict in favor of said appellant.

Both appellants contend that the court erred in giving certain instructions and refusing certain other instructions. A great many of the instructions given are severely criticized by both appellants. We have examined carefully all instructions, both given and refused, and we are of the opinion that, when the instructions given are taken as a whole they fully and correctly state the law applicable to all phases of the case. Both appellants offered a large number of instructions, and a great many were refused, and it is entirely unnecessary for us to discuss each refused instruction. Suffice it to say we find no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in refusing or giving any of the instructions complained of.

[13, 14] The appellants also contend that the amount of the verdict is excessive as a matter of law. We are likewise unable to agree with this contention. A motion for a new trial was made upon several grounds, among them being "excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5. The motion for a new trial was denied. The rule is well established that the amount of damages in this kind of an action is committed first to the sound discretion of a jury, and next to the discretion of the judge of the trial court, who in ruling upon the motion for a new trial may consider the evidence anew, determine anew the facts, and set aside the verdict if it is not just. Upon appeal the decision of the trial court and the jury on the subject cannot be set aside, unless the verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury. Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 262 P. 1100, and cases there cited.

[15] We have carefully examined the entire record, including the evidence, and there is nothing in the record to show that the verdict was not the result of a fair and honest judgment of the jury. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the deceased was a man of 42 years of age, in good health, with a proven income of from $4,000 to $5,000 per annum, and an expectancy of life of 26.72 years, and contributed from $250 to $300 a month to plaintiffs. When all the facts and circumstances are considered, we think the award is not disproportionate to the compensation reasonably warranted by the facts.

Many other contentions are made by both appellants for a reversal of the judgment, but we have carefully considered them all, and find none of them of sufficient importance to warrant a reversal of the judgment or require special discussion. We have given the entire case careful consideration, and, as above stated, we have come to the conclusion that the question of negligence on the part of Rarity and contributory negligence on the part of deceased were questions of fact for the jury, and, the jury having determined that both Rarity and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company were negligent, we find no reason to disturb their findings and judgment.

Therefore the judgment will be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

COOK v. MASON et al. (Civ. 3834.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1929.

1. Statutes $\S$ 79(1)—Law is general when it applies equally to all persons embraced in class founded upon natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction; "general law" (Const. art. 1, § 21).

A law is "general" and constitutional, under Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting granting of special privileges or immunities, when law applies equally to all persons embraced in class founded upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, General Law.]

2. Evidence $\S$ 14—It is common knowledge that one enlisting in army and navy first undergoes examinations and, after acceptance, receives training instilling habits of advantage in employment such as city fireman.

It is a matter of common knowledge that one enlisting in army or navy, either in war or peace times, has first to undergo examinations as to his physical and mental fitness for such service, and that after his acceptance he is subjected to vigorous training which instills habits of industry, sobriety, obedience, and fortitude that are of recognized advantage in such employment as a member of city fire department.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 205(7)—Municipal corporations $\S$ 217(4)—Preference granted to soldiers, sailors, and marines by charter provisions relating to civil service does not contravene constitutional provisions regarding special privileges (Const. art. 1, § 21).

Preference privilege granted to soldiers, sailors, and marines by provisions of charter of city of Sacramento relating to civil service examinations held not to contravene Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting granting of special privileges or immunities.

4. Statutes ⇨64(1)—Constitutional portions of statute may stand alone if separable from void portions.

Constitutional portion of statute may stand alone and remain in force if they can be separated from portions which are void.

5. Statutes ⇨64(4)—Charter provision granting soldiers and sailors preference in civil service examinations is valid, even though clause relating to examination grade required of them is invalid.

Charter provision granting preference privilege to soldiers, sailors, and marines in civil service examinations held valid, even if clause to effect that honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines passing average grade of 65 shall be deemed eligible, though others must have grade of 70, is invalid, since such clause may be stricken out or eliminated without destroying efficacy and purpose of remainder of section.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Petition by James E. Cook against Wallace Mason and others for a writ of mandate. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Ray T. Coughlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Hugh B. Bradford and Joseph L. Knowles, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment denying appellant a writ of mandate requiring the civil service commission of the city of Sacramento to place his name second on the civil service eligible list of said city for the position of fireman.

The facts are not disputed and are substantially as follows: Appellant, with a number of other applicants, took the civil service examination for the position of fireman of said city, which was held on November 17, 1928. As a result of this examination appellant received an average grade of 94.03 per cent., the same being the second highest grade received by any applicant. Seventeen other applicants, all of whom were honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines, passed this examination with a grade higher than 70 per cent. Applicant does not claim that he is an honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine.

In placing the names of said successful applicants on the eligible list, the civil service board, instead of placing appellant second on the eligible list of persons to fill the position of fireman of said city, placed him eighteenth on said list.

The civil service board claimed that, by reason of certain preferences given honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines by the city charter, the said seventeen applicants, who were honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and whose average grade was more than 70 per cent., were entitled to be placed ahead of petitioner on the civil service list and to be certified to fill vacancies as firemen of the fire department of said city ahead of appellant.

Section 43 of said charter provides that "the Civil Service Board shall formulate rules and regulations covering the selection and promotion of municipal employees. * * * All officers or employees shall be chosen or promoted, whenever a list of eligibles is furnished by the Civil Service Board, from the three candidates standing highest on the list." Sections 44 and 45 of said charter are as follows:

"Section 44. It shall be the duty of the Civil Service Board to hold examinations and to administer suitable tests to those desiring positions or who are applicants for, or who may have been recommended for promotion in the classified service, for the purpose of determining their fitness to hold such positions, or to qualify for such promotion, and from the results of said examination and tests, the Board shall prepare lists of eligibles for all positions in the classified service."

"Section 45. In all such tests, honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines, and widows of such and the wives of injured soldiers, sailors and marines who themselves are not qualified, but whose wives are qualified to hold such positions shall not be subject to any age limitations. If such person has attained an average percentage of 65 where the average percentage required is 70, he shall be eligible and his name shall be placed on the list above and be certified before the names of persons who have not been allowed preferences. If the name of more than one preferred claimant appears on the same list, the name of the claimant having the highest average percentage shall head the list. Preference under this section does not apply to promotions or to promotion examination."

The employees of the fire department of said city belong to the classified service. And while there is no positive statement to that effect, presumably the civil service board, under the rules and regulations formulated by it, required the applicant to have an average percentage of 70 to entitle his name to be placed on the eligible list.

Appellant contends that said section 45 is unconstitutional, in that it is in conflict with section 21, article 1, of the Constitution of this state. This section of the Constitution is as follows: "No special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the legislature, nor shall any citizen or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens."

[1] Construing this provision of the Constitution, it has been held time and again that while arbitrary discriminations by the Legislature between persons standing in the same relation to the subject of legislation will not be sustained by the courts, it is firmly settled that a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction. Ex parte King, 157 Cal. 161, 106 P. 578; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 251, 27 P. 604; City of Sacramento v. Swanston, 29 Cal. App. 212, 155 P. 101. In the case of Martin v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762, 765, it is said: "The classification, however, must not be arbitrarily made for the mere purpose of classification, but must be based upon some distinction, natural, intrinsic, or constitutional, which suggests a reason for and justifies the particular legislation. That is to say, not only must the class itself be germane to the purpose of the law, but the individual components of the class must be characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes which suggest the need for and the propriety of the legislation. Subject to these limitations a law is general despite the fact that it operates only upon a class of individuals or things, * * * within the class to which it is addressed."

Appellant concedes this to be the law, but he contends that before honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines can be a distinctive class, that is to say, that kind of a class which is exempted from the provisions of the said section of the Constitution, it must appear that such soldiers, sailors, and marines served during times of war. In other words, that they must be veterans of some war in which the United States has engaged and that the act or law creating the class must so specify.

The attention of this court has been called to the case of Board of Directors v. Nye, 8 Cal. App. 527, 97 P. 208, where the court upheld the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature that gave a preference to dependents of veterans who served in the Civil War. In that case the court held that veterans of the Civil War constituted a class founded upon a natural distinction.

Cases cited from other states were founded upon laws granting privileges to veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars, and in those cases the courts upheld the constitutionality of the acts granting such privileges. In the case of State ex rel. Raines v. City of Seattle, 134 Wash. 360, 235 P. 968, 971, in commenting on a law of this nature the court said: "Many states have provided by statute that, if veterans pass the examination, they may be preferred in employment to nonveterans who have passed the same examination. In some states such preference of employment was limited to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War and afterwards amended to include honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Spanish War, which preferences were much more limited as to class, and not applying upon the same terms to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors." Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 408.

Does the broadening of the class to whom the privilege is extended render the class no longer a distinctive one? There would seem to be no justification for so holding if the class as so broadened is still characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes which suggest the need for and propriety of the legislation.

In upholding what is generally referred to as the "Veteran Acts or Laws," they have generally been upheld on the ground that a person who has served in the army or navy in time of war would be likely to possess courage, constancy, habits of obedience, and fidelity, which are valuable qualifications for any public office or employment. 19 R. C. L. 755.

And as was said in the case of Opinion of the Justices, 166 Mass. 589, 44 N. E. 625, 34 L. R. A. 58, that in addition to this "the recognition of the service of veterans * * * would promote that love of country and devotion to the welfare of the state which it concerns the commonwealth to foster." So, in the case under consideration, the Legislature may have, and doubtless did think, that a person who has served in the army or navy and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, had by such service acquired habits of industry, obedience, and fidelity, which are valuable qualifications for any public office or employment, and, moreover, that the recognition of this service would promote the love of country and devotion to its welfare which it concerns the state to foster.

[2] It is a matter of common knowledge that a person who enlists in the army or navy, or who is accepted in such service, either in war or peace times, has first to undergo tests and examinations as to his physical and mental fitness for such service, and that after his acceptance he is subjected to vigorous training which instills habits of industry, sobriety, obedience, and fortitude that are of recognized advantage in such employment as a member of the city fire department.

[3] We are of the opinion that the preference privilege granted to soldiers, sailors, and marines by the provisions of said charter of the city of Sacramento does not contravene the said section of the Constitution.

Appellant contends that section 45 of the said charter of the city of Sacramento is unconstitutional upon another ground, namely, that the eligible grade is placed by the civil service board at 70, that is to say, an applicant is qualified for the position of fireman of said fire department if he obtains an average grade of 70, but that an honorably discharged soldier or sailor or marine is qualified if he obtains an average grade of 65, and in support of this contention, cites the case of Brown v. Russell, 166 Mass. 14, 43 N. E. 1005, 32 L. R. A. 253, 55 Am. St. Rep. 357, where a veteran was placed at the head of the list without any examination as to his qualification, in which case the court ordered his name stricken from the list, holding that even though he was a veteran of the Civil War, it was necessary that he should be found qualified for the position for which he applied before he could be placed on the eligible list. Veteran acts have been sustained by the courts where they do not discriminate as to the eligibility or qualification for office, but they have been held unconstitutional so far as they require that certain offices shall be filled by veterans in preference to all other persons without regard to fitness. 43 Cor. Jur. 609.

The charter of the city of Sacramento not only provides that employees belonging to the classified service, which includes firemen, shall be appointed on no other grounds and for no other reason than their fitness for the position to be filled, but also provides that all applicants, including honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and marines, shall pass the same examination and be subjected to the same tests as to their qualifications for the employment for which they shall apply. In providing in said charter that where the average grade for eligibility is placed at 70 the honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine shall be deemed eligible who has passed an average grade of 65, the framers of the charter undoubtedly took into consideration the qualifying training that the honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine had already received from his service in the army or navy, and which placed him at an advantage over the nonservice applicant. But the authorities bearing upon this proposition that have been called to the attention of this court, while upholding the constitutionality of the laws granting preferences to veterans, yet require, as a preliminary step toward granting such preference, that the veteran shall have attained the qualifying grade. State ex rel. Raines v. City of Seattle, 134 Wash. 360, 235 P. 968; In re Opinion of the Justices, 166 Mass. 589, 44 N. E. 625, 34 L. R. A. 58; In re Application of George Keymer, 148 N. Y. 219, 42 N. E. 667, 35 L. R. A. 447.

"In all examinations, competitive and non-competitive, veterans have no preference over other citizens of the state; but when as a result of these examinations, a list is made up from which appointments can be made, consisting of those whose merit and fitness have been duly ascertained, then the veteran is entitled to a preference without regard to his standing on the list." 43 C. J. 609, and cases there cited.

The cases of Jones v. O'Toole et al., 190 Cal. 252, 212 P. 9, and McKeon v. O'Toole, 71 Cal.

App. 445, 235 P. 464, do not throw light upon the point here involved. These were both cases where the veterans had taken examinations and passed the qualifying grade, and the matter there determined was whether or not, by reason of the fact that they were veterans, they were entitled, upon applications for promotions, to a percentage over that given by the examination.

If it should be conceded that the part of section 45 requiring honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and marines to be placed on the eligible list upon attaining a percentage of 65, where the qualifying percentage is 70, is violative of the Constitution, still this does not require that the whole of said section should be declared unconstitutional.

[4, 5] It is a general rule, supported by an unbroken line of decisions, that a provision in or a part of an act may be unconstitutional and beyond the power of the Legislature to enact and still the whole act may not be void. The accepted doctrine in such cases is that the constitutional portions of the statute may stand alone and remain in force if they can be separated from the portions which are void. 5 Cal. Jur. 643, and cases there cited. It unquestionably was the intention of the framers of the charter to give the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and marines a preference in the employment of those who came within the classified service; it is equally plain that the clause in said section 45 pertaining to the percentage of 65 can be stricken out or eliminated therefrom without destroying the efficacy and purpose of the remainder of said section. As was said in the case of Hale v. McGettigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 P. 1049, 1052: "If the different parts of the statute are severable and independent of each other, and the provisions which are within the constitutional power of the legislature are capable of being carried into effect after the void part has been eliminated, and it is clear from the statute itself that it was the intent of the legislature to enact these provisions irrespective of the others, the unconstitutional provisions will be disregarded, and the statute read as if these provisions were not there." Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 77 P. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249; In re Mitchell, 19 Cal. App. 567, 126 P. 856; In re Nicholls, 74 Cal. App. 504, 241 P. 399.

The words "65 where the average percentage required is" may be stricken from said section without affecting the validity of the remainder thereof; that, as so stricken, the said section 45 will require all applicants to attain an average percentage of 70, which is the qualifying percentage for all.

It appearing that all of the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and marines who have been placed upon the eligible list ahead of appellant have passed the required examinations and tests with an average percentage of more than 70, we are of the opinion that the judgment denying the writ of mandate should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

WALKER v. KIMBALL FRUIT CO., Inc.
(two cases). (Civ. 6788, 6789.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 24, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Jan. 23, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1930.

1. Contracts ⇨42—Delivery of contract, sent by mail, is not complete until its receipt and acceptance; post office not being addressee's agent.

Where a contract is sent by mail, post office is not agent of person to whom it is addressed, and delivery is not complete until receipt and acceptance thereof.

2. Appeal and error ⇨999(1)—Jury's verdicts for sellers, in action for difference between amounts paid and guaranteed, held not implied findings, binding on appeal, that guarantees were in contracts when received through mail by buyer's state agent.

Testimony of buyer's soliciting agent that minimum price guarantees were written in duplicate contracts mailed by him to buyer's state agent, and latter's testimony that no such guarantees were contained therein when he received them about a day after their mailing, held not conflicting, so as to render jury's verdicts for sellers, in actions for difference between amounts paid and guaranteed, implied findings, binding on appellate court, that guarantees were in contract when received by state agent.

3. Corporations ⇨406(2) — Generally, president of commercial corporation may bind it by contracts made pursuant to its ordinary business.

Generally, president of corporation organized for commercial purposes has power to bind corporation by contracts made in pursuance of its ordinary business.

4. Corporations ⇨405—Foreign corporation's general state agent ordinarily has all authority necessary to carry on employer's business.

Ordinarily, foreign corporation's general state agent is clothed with all authority necessary to enable him to carry on employer's business.

5. Principal and agent ⇨104(2)—Buyer's soliciting agent ordinarily has no right to make price guarantees.

Making of price guarantees is not a usual or necessary right of mere soliciting agent of buyer under any ordinary state of affairs.

6. Principal and agent ⇨123(7)—Evidence held to show that buyer's soliciting agent had no authority to guarantee minimum prices for apple crops.

In sellers' actions for difference between amounts paid for their apple crops and minimum prices guaranteed, evidence held to show that defendant's soliciting agent had no actual authority to enter into contracts guaranteeing minimum prices.

7. Principal and agent ⇨119(6)—Sellers had burden of showing ostensible authority of buyer's soliciting agent to make agreements guaranteeing minimum prices (Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2334).

Sellers insisting that one with whom they dealt, with knowledge that he was acting as buyer's agent, had ostensible authority to make agreements guaranteeing minimum prices, had burden of showing, in actions for difference between amounts paid for their apple crops and guaranteed prices, that agent acted within scope of his authority, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2334.

8. Principal and agent ⇨123(7)—Evidence held not to show that buyer held out or represented soliciting agent as authorized to make price guarantees.

In fruit sellers' actions for difference between amounts paid for their apple crops and guaranteed minimum prices, evidence held not to show that defendant held out or represented its soliciting agent as having any authority to make such guarantees.

9. Principal and agent ⇨147(2)—Fruit sellers, knowing of past unauthorized price guarantees by buyer's soliciting agent, held precluded from recovering difference between amounts paid and guaranteed by him by failure to inquire of buyer's state agent as to extent of soliciting agent's authority.

Fruit sellers, knowing that buyer's soliciting agent had made unauthorized price guarantees in past, held precluded from recovering difference between amounts paid them and minimum prices guaranteed by such agent by want of good faith and ordinary care in not inquiring of defendant's general state agent as to extent of soliciting agent's authority before shipping fruit.

10. Principal and agent ⇨173(3)—Buyer's state agent's receipt and retention of contracts mailed by soliciting agent held not ratification of latter's unauthorized price guarantees, in view of evidence.

Buyer's general state agent's receipt of contracts mailed to him by soliciting agent and retention thereof without objection until after delivery of apples to buyer held not ratification of soliciting agent's unauthorized price guarantees, in view of state agent's testimony that contract contained no guarantees when received and his clerk's testimony as to sending sellers a letter stating that buyer was not going to make any such guarantees.

Appeals from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by D. G. Walker and H. Walker, respectively, against the Kimball Fruit Company, Inc. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and Webster V. Clark, all of San Francisco, and Geary & Geary and C. J. Tauzer, all of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

DEASY, Justice pro tem. These two cases involved practically identical states of fact, and were tried together, although separate verdicts were entered. The appeals were consolidated for hearing and submitted together.

Respondents H. Walker and D. G. Walker are father and son, and in the year 1926 were the owners of adjoining orchards situated in Dry Creek valley in Sonoma county. In July, 1926, one Kemp Ross, as agent for appellant, entered into a contract with H. Walker, reading as follows:

"This Agreement made at Healdsburg, California, this 1st day of July, A. D. 1926, between H. Walker hereinafter called the Grower, and Kimball Fruit Co., Inc., successor to Dennis, Kimball & Pope, fruit shippers, whose principal place of business is at New York, hereinafter called the shipper:

"Witnesseth: Guaranteed minimum of 90 cents on Fancy per X and 65 cents on C grade.

"That for and in consideration of the sum of One Dollar in hand paid by the shipper to the Grower and other valuable considerations, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the Grower hereby places $\frac{1}{2}$ his entire crops of Gravensteins apples grown on the following described property in Sonoma County, State of California, to wit: Located 5 mi. "For the season of 1926 of good merchantable quality suitable for marketing, in the hands of the shipper to market for his account. The Shipper shall receive for its services in marketing said crops, the usual commercial rates of loading and packing charges and commission established by it in that district, which Grower hereby agrees to pay. Said fruit or grapes are to be picked and delivered at Grower's expense to the nearest packing house of said Shipper, and Shipper is to furnish the materials and do the packing and loading for which the Grower has hereinbefore agreed to pay. The Shipper agrees to use due diligence to market said crops to the best advantage to all parties.

"If the Grower is indebted to the Shipper at any time during the continuance of this agreement, the proceeds of said crops are hereby pledged to secure said indebtedness; and if said indebtedness is not fully paid be-

"By Kemp Ross, Shipper.

"D. G. Walker, Grower

"Address: Healdsburg, Cal. R. 2."

Appellant does not question the fact that Ross entered into contracts with respondents, but at the trial contended that the contracts were not as claimed by respondents, and that the duplicates forwarded by Ross to appellant's agent in San Francisco, one Alexander Young, Jr., were different in form from those set out herein. The ones shown above were those delivered by Ross to the respondents. At the trial it appeared that on the duplicates mailed to Young by Ross erasures had been made, and that no guaranteed minimum price was specified for the apples.

Each of the respondents delivered apples to appellant during the season of 1926, and certain moneys were remitted to them, not amounting in either case to the guaranteed minimum price. Respondents thereupon demanded from appellant the difference claimed to be due to each of them, and upon the refusal of appellant to pay brought suits to recover such differences.

The actions were tried by a jury, which brought in a verdict for H. Walker in the sum of $2,085 and interest, and a verdict for D. G. Walker in the sum of $418 and interest. From the judgments rendered on these verdicts the defendant appealed.

The first contention of appellant is that no minimum price had ever been agreed upon, for the reason that the general agent of appellant, Mr. Young, never authorized the making of the guarantees because of the different wording in the contracts. The agent Ross testified that he mailed the duplicates to Young either from Healdsburg or Santa Rosa, and that, when he did so, the guarantees were written in exactly as they appeared in the contracts delivered to respondents. Young testified that, when he received the contracts in San Francisco, he read them, and that no provisions as to guarantees were contained in them. An interval of about a day elapsed between the mailing of them and their receipt by Young. The testimony of both witnesses may be true.

[1] Where a contract, such as the ones involved here, is sent by mail, the postoffice cannot be said to be the agent of the person to whom it is addressed, and the delivery is not complete until the receipt of the contract and its acceptance. Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, 163 Cal. 485, 126 P. 153, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

[2] In view of this rule, it cannot well be said that there was any conflict in the evidence on the question as to whether the guarantees were in the contracts when received by Young, and hence any claim of respondents that the verdict of the jury is an implied finding on that subject, and therefore binding on this court on appeal, can have no merit.

The foregoing statement and conclusion are not decisive of the case, however, because the question of the authority of the agent Ross is not therein considered. The importance of the matter discussed will be adverted to more fully hereafter in connection with another point in the case. If Ross had authority, either actual or ostensible, to make the contracts containing the guarantees, Young's action or inaction in the matter would become immaterial.

It is contended, however, by appellant that

Ross had neither actual nor ostensible authority to enter into any contracts with respondents by which minimum prices were guaranteed. Many of the exceptions taken by appellant bear upon this contention, and do not require separate consideration. If Ross had authority, either actual or ostensible, as the agent of appellant to guarantee minimum prices to respondents, the judgments must be affirmed. If he had not such authority, they must be reversed, unless the contracts were subsequently ratified by appellant.

[3] We will first consider the question of actual authority. In approaching this question it is apparent from the record that any actual authority could only have been conferred upon Ross by C. W. Kimball, the president of appellant, or by Alexander Young, its general agent in California. Appellant contends that there was no showing at the trial of any authority in C. W. Kimball, as president of appellant, to confer actual authority upon Ross. In support of this contention we are referred to the cases of Black v. Harrison Home Co., 155 Cal. 121, 99 P. 494, and Butler v. Solano Land Co., 46 Cal. App. 171, 188 P. 1019. We do not believe that these cases are controlling here, for the reason that in each of them was involved the question of alienating the lands of the corporation, the power to do which is ordinarily vested in the board of directors, and such, in effect, is the ruling in the cases cited. Rather, the rule applicable to purely business or commercial corporations is to be considered. That rule is that generally in a corporation organized for commercial purposes the president has power to bind the corporation by contracts made in pursuance of its ordinary business.

In Grummet v. Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Co., 181 Cal. 509, the court said at page 513, 185 P. 388, 389:

"A corporation can act only through its agents, and the president of a corporation, as the agent and corporate representative, has the power, in the ordinary course of business and in furtherance of the corporate interests, to execute contracts and to bind the company in so doing. He is, by virtue of his office, recognized as the business head of the company, and any contract pertaining to the corporate affairs, within the general powers of such officer, executed by the president on behalf of his corporation, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been done by authority of the corporation."

And to the same general effect is the ruling in Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., Inc., 18 Cal. App. 242, 123 P. 212.

[4] The record shows that Alexander Young was appointed by defendant as its general agent for California. Ordinarily such an agent is clothed with all the authority necessary to enable him to carry on the business of his employer. The principal place of business of appellant was in New York, and it is a fair inference from the record that, so far as the business in California was concerned, he had the same plenary power that the president exercised.

[5, 6] Coming now to the evidence on the subject of the actual authority of Ross, we find that he testified that, when Mr. Kimball had looked at the crop of apples in the orchard of the respondent H. Walker, a conversation took place between Kimball and Ross out of the hearing of H. Walker, in the course of which Kimball said to Ross something about the fine quality of the apples that H. Walker was raising, and then said, "You get this crop regardless." Ross also testified that Young on one occasion told him to go out and get apples regardless, because he was afraid that they had ordered too much box shoo.

The record shows that Ross was employed to solicit shipments of apples from growers in Sonoma county to the packing plant of appellant at Healdsburg. The contract forms he used were shipping contracts. It would seem to require the stretching of imagination almost to the breaking point to interpret the words "Get apples regardless" as conferring any express authority to make guarantees. That is not under any ordinary state of affairs a usual or necessary right possessed by a mere soliciting agent.

From the foregoing we conclude that Ross had no actual authority to enter into the contracts guaranteeing minimum prices.

[7, 8] Ostensible authority is such as a principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Section 2317, Civ. Code.

A principal is bound by acts of his agent, under a merely ostensible authority, to those persons only who have in good faith, and, without want of ordinary care, incurred a liability, or parted with value, upon the faith thereof. Section 2334, Civ. Code.

In considering the question of ostensible authority, we must keep these Code provisions clearly in mind, and carefully examine the facts in the light of the rules stated therein. In the case of Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. Santa Cruz Bank, 82 Cal. App. 519, at page 522, 255 P. 881, 882, in speaking of ostensible authority, this court said: "The determination of this character of authority is not a matter that lends itself to any hard and fast rule. It is almost wholly a question of fact."

What, then, are the facts in this case as disclosed by the record? Appellant, a New York corporation, had done a shipping and consignment business in various kinds of fruit in California for a short time prior to 1926. In that year Alexander Young, who maintained an office in San Francisco, became its general agent for California. Early in the year C. W. Kimball, president of appellant, came to California, and, being desirous of doing business in Sonoma county, where none had been done by appellant prior to that time, visited Sonoma county with Young, and there met a number of apple growers who had been requested by Young to assemble for that purpose. Neither of the respondents attended that meeting. Prior to that time, at the suggestion of Young, Ross had been employed as a solicitor, and at the meeting met C. W. Kimball for the first time. A day or so later Kimball, Young, and Ross called on respondent H. Walker, and Kimball looked over said respondent's orchard. Kimball at that time stated that Ross was his representative there, and that Ross would call to see H. Walker later in regard to the fruit. Ross thereafter called on said respondent a number of times, and finally entered into the contract which is the basis of this action. Respondent D. G. Walker did not meet Young or Kimball at that time, and dealt altogether with Ross. The original meeting took place about two months prior to the making of the contracts. Meanwhile, appellant furnished to several banks in the vicinity a statement showing the financial standing of appellant and references to Eastern concerns. This was deemed advisable, because the company had never before done business in Sonoma county, and, in view of the nature of its business, wanted to satisfy the growers that they could with safety ship their fruit to it. One of the banks so supplied with information was the First National Bank of Healdsburg, and on the second page of the document sent there the following statement appeared:

"The Kimball Fruit Company does not merchandise nor buy anything for its own account, or use the company's funds in buying and selling, but confines its operations exclusively to a commission basis."

The record shows that prior to the execution of his contract the respondent H. Walker called at the First National Bank of Healdsburg to inquire about appellant's standing, and the document above referred to was shown him. He testified that he did not read the second page, but J. H. Miller, the cashier, testified that to the best of his recollection he read the entire document to said respondent. Respondent D. G. Walker made no inquiries of any kind, except from his father. It appears from the record that both respondents knew Ross for several years, and both stated that they had heard that in former years he had been in trouble because of unauthorized guarantees made by him on behalf of persons whom he had represented as a solicitor of business.

In the light of the facts so disclosed by the record, we feel that this case is controlled by the decision in the case of Peterkin v. Randolph Marketing Co., 48 Cal. App. 300, 191 P. 947, 948. The instant case is practically on all fours with the case above referred to, the main distinction being that there the contract was an oral one and here the contracts were in writing. That distinction is unimportant.

In that case the court said: "Since plaintiff and his assignor dealt with Gow, knowing him to be acting as an agent of defendant, the burden was upon them to show that he in making the alleged agreement was acting within the scope of authority conferred upon him so to do. While counsel for respondent concedes that no express power was conferred upon Gow to either purchase or guarantee the price of the fruit delivered to defendant, he nevertheless insists that he was clothed with ostensible authority to make the agreement, and hence, since as claimed it recognized and adopted like contracts made by him with others, defendant is estopped from denying that Gow as its agent was authorized to make the alleged agreements. Conceding this to be the law, our attention is directed to no evidence whatever, either printed in the brief or contained in the typewritten transcript, which in the slightest degree tends to show that defendant had, through its agents or otherwise, purchased fruit at a stipulated price or guaranteed the price thereof, or shipped fruit other than on consignment for sale on commission."

The last-quoted paragraph is singularly appropriate here. There is no evidence here of any guarantees except those in the contracts sued on, and each respondent testified that he had never heard of any others.

Other cases exactly in point are Cannon v. Long, 135 Wash. 52, 236 P. 788; Fargason Co. v. Dudley, 173 Ark. 1148, 294 S. W. 6, and First National Bank v. Farson, 226 N. Y. 218, 123 N. E. 490, 492.

In the latter case the court said: "It is a general rule that the power of an agent to bind the principal in contracts of guaranty or suretyship can only be charged against the principal by necessary implication, where the duties to be performed cannot be discharged without the exercise of such a power, or where the power is a manifestly necessary and customary incident of the authority bestowed upon the agent, and where the power is practically indispensable to accomplish the object in view."

The duty of one dealing with an agent to satisfy himself as to the scope of the agent's authority is similarly stated in the California cases of Mitrovich v. Fresno Fruit Packing Co., 123 Cal. 379, 55 P. 1064, and Allen v. San Francisco Wholesale Dairy Produce Exchange, 59 Cal. App. 93, 210 P. 41. The general tenor of the rulings in those cases is that one who seeks to charge a supposed principal with obligations resulting from the acts and conduct of an alleged ostensible agent must first show that he himself was cognizant of the facts which gave color to the alleged ostensible agency and caused him to believe that the person with whom he dealt was acting within the scope of his authority as agent.

As a result of what has been said, we must conclude that there was no holding out or representation by appellant of Ross as having any authority whatever to make the guarantees in question.

[9] It clearly appears that respondents in dealing with Ross were not acting "in good faith, and without want of ordinary care." They both knew that he had in the past made unauthorized guarantees and had been in trouble on that account, and it would certainly be the act of an ordinarily careful and prudent business man to inquire of the general agent Young as to the extent of the authority of Ross before shipping any apples under the contracts.

Respondents have referred to the following cases: Leavens v. Pinkham & McKevitt, 164 Cal. 243, 128 P. 399; Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. Farmers & Merchants Bank, 82 Cal. App. 519, 255 P. 881; Aigeltinger v. Burke, 176 Cal. 621, 169 P. 373; Resetar v. Leonardi, 61 Cal. App. 765, 216 P. 71; Hicks v. Wilson, 197 Cal. 269, 240 P. 289, and Producers' Fruit Co. v. Goddard, 75 Cal. App. 737, 243 P. 686, which they claim support their position.

We have examined these authorities carefully, and fully agree with the conclusions therein expressed, but they are clearly distinguishable from the cases at bar. In each of them the agent by whose acts the principal was sought to be charged had been held out generally, and for a long period of time, and to the particular persons concerned, as possessing the authority he assumed to exercise, and in many instances unauthorized acts similar to the ones in issue in the cases mentioned had been ratified by the principal.

The record in this case discloses no such state of facts, and there is no evidence upon which any ostensible authority in Ross to make the guarantees can be predicated.

[10] Respondents' claim of ratification cannot be sustained. It is based upon the theory that, Young having received the contracts containing the guarantees, and having retained them without objection until after the apples had been delivered to appellant, any unauthorized acts of Ross were ratified. As we have stated, Young testified positively that, when he received the contracts, they contained no guarantees, and that he first learned that the ones he had in his possession differed from those received by respondents in the months of September, and that he repudiated the guarantees immediately. In addition to this, Miss Gielow, a clerk in Young's office, testified positively that she sent a letter to each of the respondents shortly after their contracts were received by Young in which the following language appeared: "We are not going to make any promises or guarantees of prices, but we want you to realize that we have our heart and soul in the result of this work, and that our interests are entirely for your good." It is true that respondents each denied the receipt of such a letter, but the testimony is, in other respects, uncontradicted. Surely some emphatic repudiation would have been sent had

Young known of the guarantees, instead of a form letter, which the record shows was similar to those sent to all growers whose contracts came to Young's office.

For a similar reason respondents' claim of estoppel is untenable.

It would needlessly prolong this opinion if the various exceptions were taken up and discussed. Some of them are entirely without merit, particularly those addressed to the instructions given by the court to the jury, and the others are all sufficiently covered by what has been said.

For the reasons stated, we conclude that the judgment in each of the cases must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.;

LLOYD v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 11802.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1929.

1. Criminal law § 1192—Trial court has power to hear and determine probation applications at any time prior to execution of sentence, regardless of appeal (Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493).

Under Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493, trial court has power to hear and determine applications for probation at any time prior to execution of sentence, without regard to whether defendant has in the meantime undertaken to prosecute a vain and unsuccessful appeal.

2. Mandamus § 61—Application for writ of mandate was proper remedy to require trial court to hear and determine probation application (Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended).

Application for a writ of mandate was proper remedy to require trial court to hear and determine application for probation, under the provisions of Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended, regardless of fact that appeal might lie from order either granting or refusing probation, since an appeal in such case would not furnish a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

In Bank.

Original application by Charles E. Lloyd for a writ of mandate, to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles and Hon. William T. Aggeler, Judge of Department 26 thereof. Writ granted.

Jackson Hayes, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

T. C. Becker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner applies for a peremptory writ of mandate to be directed to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, and the judge thereof, commanding said court to entertain, hear, and determine the application of petitioner for probation, under the provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code. The facts underlying petitioner's application, and which are undenied, may be briefly stated as follows:

The petitioner, after his indictment by a grand jury for the offense of involuntary manslaughter, was brought to trial thereon, and on or about April 25, 1928, was found by the jury to be guilty of said charge. Thereafter, and on April 27, 1928, after his motion for a new trial had been denied, the petitioner was by the judgment of said superior court sentenced to a term in the state prison at San Quentin for the period prescribed by law for the crime of manslaughter, whereupon the petitioner on said 27th day of April, 1928, appealed to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2, which appellate tribunal, after due hearing and consideration of said appeal, and on or about April 20, 1929, made and entered its decision affirming the judgment of the trial court, and thereafter and in due course the remittitur in said cause was filed with the clerk of said superior court. People v. Lloyd (Cal. App.) 275 P. 1010. Upon taking his said appeal, petitioner had been granted a writ of probable cause, pending said appeal, and the decision thereon, and as the result thereof had remained in the county jail of the county of Los Angeles pending his said appeal, and up to and including May 21, 1929. On said 21st day of May, 1929, and after the judgment of said court had become final by its affirmance upon appeal, but before any further order of said court had been made looking to the execution of said judgment, the petitioner applied to said superior court and to William T. Aggeler, the judge thereof, for an order granting him probation, which application came on for hearing on or about May 24, 1929, whereupon the said court and the judge thereof denied the same, upon the express ground that the said court and the judge thereof had no authority to entertain said application or to grant probation thereon after appeal by said defendant from its foregoing judgment and sentence and after the affirmance thereof by the appellate tribunal upon such appeal.

In so deciding, and in so refusing to grant probation to the petitioner upon his said application, the superior court rested its decision to that effect upon the majority opinion of this court in the case of Beggs v. Superior Court, 179 Cal. 130, 175 P. 642. In so doing, however, the trial court and the judge thereof did not apparently take cognizance of the fact that section 1203 of the Penal Code of California, which had been construed by this court in the course of its foregoing opinion, had been thereafter several times amended by successive acts of the Legislature, and it is the contention of the petitioner that the effect of these several amendments of said section of the Penal Code has been such as to render the decision of this court in the case of Beggs v. Superior Court, supra, no longer applicable to applications for probation, when the same are made after appeal and affirmance of the judgment and sentence of the trial court, and that as a result thereof persons who have been convicted of offenses to which the beneficent and merciful provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code are applicable may now, under the provisions of said section as thus amended, make application for probation after the affirmance of the judgment and sentence of the trial court upon appeal, and at any time prior to the execution of said judgment and sentence, and that in the state of the section as thus amended it has become the duty of the trial court to entertain, hear, and determine such applications for probation, and the petitioner for that reason has presented this application for a writ of mandate to compel such action on the part of the trial court.

Section 1203 of the Penal Code as it existed at the time of the decision of this court in the Beggs Case, read, as to the portion thereof affected by said decision, as follows:

"After plea or verdict of guilty, where discretion is conferred upon the court as to the extent of the punishment, the court, upon oral suggestions of either party, or of its own motion, that there are circumstances which may properly be taken into view, either in aggravation or mitigation, of the punishment, may in its discretion refer the same to the probation officer, directing said probation officer to investigate, and to report, recommending either for or against release upon probation, at a specified time, and the court shall hear the same summarily at such specified times, and upon such notice to the adverse party as it may direct. At such specified time, if it shall appear from the report furnished by the probation officer, or otherwise, and from the circumstances, of any person over the age of eighteen years, so having pleaded guilty, or having been convicted of crime, that there are circumstances in mitigation of the punishment, or that the ends of justice shall be subserved thereby, the court shall have power, in its discretion, to place the defendant upon probation."

The decision of this court in the Beggs Case, with relation to the application of the foregoing provision of the Penal Code, was a divided opinion; two of the members of this court as then constituted dissenting from the reasoning and conclusion of the main opinion. In the main opinion, while it was apparently conceded that the limitation upon the time within which a convicted defendant would be entitled to apply for probation under the terms of said section arose by implication, it was held that the provisions of said section relating thereto were limited by the terms of sections 1191, 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code to the brief period between the conviction of the defendant and the time provided by section 1191 for pronouncing judgment and sentence. In the dissenting opinion, however, it was reasoned that, treated both historically and logically, section 1191 of the Penal Code bore no such correlation to section 1203 thereof as would have the effect of placing a limitation upon the power of the trial court to deal with the subject of probation under the latter section, either before or after pronouncing judgment so long as it had jurisdiction of the case.

A careful rereading of section 1191, of the Penal Code, as the same was originally enacted in 1872, and as the same was later and finally amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 688), convinces us that the references therein as thus amended to section 1203 of the Penal Code, and to the limitation of time therein provided for the investigation of the question of probation on the part of the trial court, have reference to the period after application for probation has been made, and not to the period within which, after conviction, such application must be made. As to sections 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code, and which remain in the form of their original adoption in 1872, we have become satisfied that neither of these sections, when historically considered, can be given the application accorded to them in the main opinion of this court in the Beggs Case, but that the better reasoning and conclusions upon this branch of the case are to be found in the dissenting opinion therein. We are enforced in this conclusion by the review of the later trend of legislation and decision touching the subject of probation as the same appears in the statutes and decisions of those other jurisdictions, state and federal, to which we shall presently refer.

Before doing so, however, we deem it necessary to first consider the several changes which have been made in the framing of section 1203 of the Penal Code by our state Legislature since the decision, in the year 1918, of Beggs v. Superior Court, supra. Section 1203 has been four times amended since the date of that decision. The first two changes therein occurring, respectively, in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 1244), and in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1296), had no bearing upon those portions of said section which are here involved in the instant proceeding. In 1923, however (St. 1923, p. 291), the Legislature made an important change in the reading of that portion of section 1203 which is above quoted, and which amendment consisted in the insertion of the words "before judgment and sentence" in that portion of the section, which was thus made to read as follows: "The court or board or commission or other authority before judgment and sentence and except as hereinafter provided, may" etc. By this amendment to the section it would seem to be sufficiently plain that the Legislature intended to make express that which had theretofore rested in implication with relation to the time after conviction within which applications for probation must be presented. In the absence of any enlightenment from the journals of that session of the Legislature, it may be fairly surmised that its purpose in making said amendment was to set at rest whatever controversies had arisen over the divided views of this court as expressed in the Beggs decision and dissent, by adopting expressly the words and meaning assigned to said section by the prevailing opinion in that case, and to thus fix upon said section the express requirement that applications for probation must be made "before judgment and sentence" in each particular case.

Having thus expressly read into said section the language and intent of the main opinion in the Beggs Case, the section of the Code thus continued to read and to so expressly intend for the succeeding four years, when it was again amended by the Legislature in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493) in several important respects, the chief of which, however, consisted in striking out of said section the words "before judgment and sentence," which had been inserted by the previous amendment. In determining what the state Legislature really intended by striking out of section 1203 the words "before judgment and sentence," which had been inserted therein by the amendment of 1923, we are aided, we think, by the positive and uniform trend of legislation and decision which has taken place in other jurisdictions, state and federal, during the past 10 years, and with which we may fairly assume the state Legislature to have been also familiar in making such further amendment of section 1203 of the Penal Code as occurred in 1927, and to which we shall now refer.

It is a significant fact that the Criminal Code of the state of New York, from which the Penal Code of California was in its original form almost bodily taken, contained certain sections relating to the procedure of trial courts after conviction, and which embodied in identical language the provisions of sections 1191, 1263, and 1265 of the Penal Code of California as originally enacted. Subsequently to the adoption of its Criminal Code, the Legislature of the state of New York incorporated therein those provisions thereof bearing upon the subject of probation, and which are to be found in identical or similar forms of expression in the legislation of many other states, and, among those, of California, and to be embodied in the latter state in section 1203 of the Penal Code as originally adopted, and in which, as in the New York statute, there was no express limitation as to the time prior to the execution of judgment and sentence within which applications for probation might be made.

In the case of People ex rel. Woodin v. Ottaway, 247 N. Y. 493, 161 N. E. 157, decided in 1925, the precise question as to the correlation of the several earlier enacted sections of the New York Criminal Code, and which are identical in form with sections 1191, 1263, and 1265 of our own Penal Code, as these sections originally read, upon the provisions of the later enacted probation law of New York, arose and was considered, and it was therein held that no such correlation existed as would prevent a defendant from making his application for probation at any time before the execution of the judgment and sentence, and this without regard to whether he had or had not prosecuted a vain appeal.

In the case of State ex rel. Bottomly v. District Court, etc., for Blaine County, 73 Mont. 541, 237 P. 525, also decided in 1925, the Supreme Court of Montana, in construing certain sections of the Penal Code of that state, which in their adoption had been based upon like provisions of the Penal Code of California, including section 1203 thereof, held, in a case in its main aspects identical with the instant proceeding, that the trial court had jurisdiction under the terms of the probation law of that state to suspend the execution of a jail sentence and place the accused upon probation after the dismissal of his appeal. In so deciding said court differentiated between the case before it and the Beggs Case, but in so doing referred to the "vigorous dissenting opinion" in the latter case, and then proceeded to hold that since, in the probation statute of Montana, there was no express limitation upon the power of the trial court to entertain an application for probation at any time prior to the execution of the sentence it must be held to possess such power in conformity with the liberal interpretation which should be adopted with reference to remedial legislation of this character.

In the case of State ex rel. Gentry v. Montgomery, 317 Mo. 811, 297 S. W. 30, 31, decided in 1927, it was held by the Supreme Court of Missouri, in construing a probation statute similar in its main aspects to the provisions of section 1203 of our Penal Code, that in the absence of an express limitation upon the power of the trial court to grant probation to a particular defendant after the affirmance of his appeal, it possessed such power so long as it retained jurisdiction of the cause.

The cases which have arisen in federal jurisdictions following the adoption of the act of Congress known as the Probation Act of March 4, 1925 (18 USCA §§ 724-727), the provisions of which act are in the main similar to the provisions of section 1203 of our Penal Code as it read prior to its two latter amendments, and as it now reads, have followed the same trend of liberal interpretation to the extent of uniformly holding that in the absence of an express limitation upon the power of the trial court to hear and determine applications for probation at any time prior to the execution of sentence the trial court possessed that power. Nix v. James (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 591; Kriebel v. United States (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 762; Evans v. District Judge (C. C. A.) 12 F.(2d) 64; Ackerson v. United States (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 268; United States v. Gargano (D. C.) 25 F.(2d) 723.

The question thus uniformly decided by the several Circuit Courts of Appeals before referred to finally made its way to the Supreme Court of the United States, wherein, and in the case of United States v. Murray, 275 U. S. 347, 357, 48 S. Ct. 146, 149, 72 L. Ed. 309, decided January 3, 1928, the opinion being delivered by Chief Justice Taft, it was held that the Federal Probation Act (28 USCA §§ 724-727) gives power to trial courts to grant probation to a convicted defendant by suspending the imposition or by suspending the execution of the sentence at any time prior to the execution thereof so long as the trial court retained jurisdiction over the cause. It thus sufficiently appears that the uniform trend both of legislation and of judicial decision, state and federal, during the 10 years which have intervened since the decision of the Beggs Case, has been steadfastly in the direction of upholding the power of trial courts to grant applications of offenders for probation at any time prior to the actual execution of the judgment or sentence, in the absence of an express limitation upon the exercise of such power contained in the terms of the probation laws.

The amendment which the Legislature of this state adopted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493) was in entire harmony with the then prevailing trend of both legislation and decision, insisting upon a liberal application to offenders of the merciful provisions of probation laws. The language of Chief Justice Taft in interpreting, in the case above cited, the section in the federal statute (18 USCA § 724) wherein it was declared that the trial courts "shall have power, after conviction or after a plea of guilty * * * to suspend the imposition or execution of sentence and to place the defendant upon probation," becomes very significant when it is noted that in section 1203 of our Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493), the foregoing sentence in almost its identical form is to be found at the beginning of subdivision 1 thereof, wherein it is declared that "the court, judge or justice thereof, in the order granting probation, may suspend the imposing or the execution of the sentence, and may direct that such suspension may continue for such period of time not exceeding the maximum possible term of such sentence, * * * upon such terms and conditions as it shall determine." In commenting upon this identical language Chief Justice Taft said: "The words mean to suspend the imposition of sentence, or to suspend the execution of sentence, and that the placing of defendant upon probation is to follow the suspension of the imposition, or the suspension of the execution of sentence, without an interval of any part of the execution. That is a reasonable construction, and serves the well-understood purpose of the statute. The suspension of execution was the point in time to which the provision for probation was directed."

[1] From the foregoing considerations we are of the opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature, by its last amendment of section 1203 of the Penal Code, adopted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493), expressly removing the limitation of time imposed by the express terms of its earlier amendment, to invest trial courts with the power under said amended section to hear and determine applications for probation at any time prior to the execution of sentence, and that without reference to whether the defendant had in the meantime undertaken to prosecute a vain and unsuccessful appeal.

[2] It may be said in conclusion, and without detailed discussion, that we are of the opinion, based upon the previous action of this court in similar proceedings, that the application for a writ of mandate is a proper form of remedy, regardless of the fact that an appeal might lie from the order of the trial court either granting or refusing probation, since we are of the view that an appeal in cases of this character would not furnish to either the people or the defendant a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

SHENK, J. I concur in the judgment ordering the peremptory writ, but I cannot agree with the reasoning of the opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature, by the amendment of section 1203 of the Penal Code in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493), merely by omitting the words "before judgment and sentence," to vest power in the superior court to grant probation at any time, even after the affirmance of the judgment on appeal. When the phrase "before judgment and sentence" was stricken from the section in 1927, the language of the section in its immediate context was restored to the same condition obtaining when the Beggs Case was decided. It must be presumed, therefore, that in adopting the language of the section in force when the Beggs Case was decided the Legislature intended to adopt the same with the construction placed thereon by the majority of this court in that case. "The familiar rule is that, when there is a re-enactment of a statute in the same language, after a construction by the courts, the new statute is presumed to be intended to have the same effect as that previously given to its predecessor." Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 700, 120 P. 771, 776, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093; Harris v. Barlow, 180 Cal. 142, 179 P. 682; Dalton v. Lelande, 22 Cal. App. 481, 135 P. 54; 23 Cal. Jur. pp. 783, 795, 796.

The effect of the majority opinion is to emphasize and reiterate the doctrine of the dissenting opinion, and overrule by indirection the majority opinion, in the Beggs Case. But I find it unnecessary to overrule that case, either by indirection or otherwise, for I find other changes in section 1203, as redrafted in 1927, to indicate an intention to broaden the powers of the trial court in matters of probation, so as to accomplish the obviously beneficial result so greatly stressed in the opinion of Mr. Justice RICHARDS. By the amendment in 1927, it was first declared in effect that the trial court should have power to fix the time when an application for probation should be heard and determined. It was provided that "the court, upon application of the defendant or of the people or upon its own motion, may summarily or at a time fixed, hear and determine, * * * the matter of probation," and that "at such time or times fixed by the court, the court may hear and determine such application," with the limitations thereafter provided, none of which is applicable to this case.

Assuming that there may be doubts as to the exact extent of the effect of the quoted language of the amendments, such doubts should be resolved in favor of an enlarged power, for the reason that the statute is remedial in its nature, and should be liberally construed in favor of the application for probation. This construction does no violence to the judgment of the majority in the Beggs Case, which appears to have been a correct solution of the problem on the then state of the law.

SEAWELL, J. I concur. I am disposed to agree with Mr. Justice SHENK'S treatment of the amendments of the Probation Act and their bearing upon the Beggs Case. In short, if the Legislature by its repeal of language which left the law precisely where it was at the time the Beggs Case was decided intended thereby to change the law as declared by the Beggs Case, why did it not make some express declaration to that effect? The difficulty I find in bringing myself to the view expressed in the main opinion as to the significance of the changes made in the law lies in the fact that if the Legislature of this state was mindful that the doctrine announced in the Beggs Case was in conflict with other jurisdictions, as suggested in the main opinion, and its purpose by amending the law was to bring this state within the rule of decisions of other jurisdictions, as argued in the main opinion, why did it not by unmistakable language fully and definitely complete its purpose?

I am, however, inclined to liberalize the law to the extent that the motion for probation may be entertained by the trial court at any time before execution of the sentence.

LESLIE v. BROWN BROS. INCORPORATION. (L. A. 9630.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Damages ⇨189—Evidence held to show that provision in lease contract for liquidated damages on lessee's failure to complete improvements within time specified constituted penalty and was therefore invalid (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Where lease contract required plaintiff lessee to construct canals and ditches, to level and make land fit for agricultural purposes, and to complete improvement by certain date, evidence held to show that provision requiring lessee, as security for faithful completion of improvements within time specified, to deposit certain mortgages and notes secured thereby with defendant, on understanding that defendant should in case of plaintiff's default, retain security as liquidated damages, constituted a penalty and not compensation for damages actually sustained, and that it was neither impracticable nor extremely difficult to estimate cost of completing improvements in case of lessee's default, and it was therefore invalid, under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨157(6)—Plaintiff, having substantially completed improvements required by lease contract, held entitled to compensation, and defendant could not retain security for performance.

Where evidence showed that plaintiff substantially performed its obligations to complete certain improvements required by lease contract, he was entitled to recover compensation as for complete performance, and defendant could not retain possession of notes and mortgages securing performance of contract; remedy being by counterclaim or by independent action for any damages sustained.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨223(2)—Plaintiff's claim for conversion of notes securing performance of obligations under lease contract held not counterclaim to defendant's actions for rent (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 422, 437, 438, 439).

Plaintiff's claim for defendant's unlawful conversion of mortgage notes and mortgages pledged by plaintiff to secure faithful performance of lease contract requiring plaintiff to make certain improvements within time specified held not in any legal sense a counterclaim to any of defendant's prior actions for rent, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 422, 437, 438, and was therefore not barred by section 439.

4. Pledges ⇨54—Lessee's failure to reply to letter reciting lessee had forfeited ownership of pledged securities held not a consent thereto.

Where plaintiff, who pledged mortgage notes and mortgages to secure faithful performance of his obligations to make improvements under lease contract, did not reply to nor in any manner manifest acceptance of terms stated in letter received from defendant's counsel, reciting that only interest plaintiff had in such securities was an option to reacquire them by completion of improvements on or before a certain date, and that, inasmuch as work was not completed within option period, option had expired, and that plaintiff forfeited his ownership therein absolutely, held that such silence, unaccompanied by any act, was not sufficient to indicate his consent to such letter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Thomas O'Brien, for whom on his death was substituted James Leslie, administrator, against Brown Bros. Incorporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 275 P. 951.

Oliver O. Clark, Chas. R. Nelson, and Carnahan & Clark, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Brown, V. N. Thompson, and B. S. Allen, all of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing of this cause by this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Third Appellate District, was granted because of the earnest and able arguments presented by appellant with reference to the decisive question of whether the parties hereto had provided by contract for valid liquidated damages or for a penalty. After a very careful consideration of the record, we are satisfied, with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, written by Justice pro tem. McDaniel, and hereby adopt said opinion as and for the opinion of this court, as follows:

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. This suit was originally commenced by one Thomas O'Brien, now deceased. Upon his death, by order of court, the administrator of his estate, James Leslie, was substituted as plaintiff. It was brought, by amended complaint, to recover damages for the alleged conversion of certain promissory notes, secured by mortgages on real property in Imperial county, for the total sum of $11,983.25; it being alleged that on December 8, 1917, the defendant came into possession of said securities, and on December 31, 1921, wrongfully and unlawfully converted them to its own use.

The answer of defendant denies wrongful or unlawful conversion and pleads an affirmative defense based upon certain contracts; also, sets up three further and separate defenses on the ground that plaintiff, by failure to counterclaim upon its alleged unlawful conversion in three separate suits prosecuted by defendant against the said Thomas O'Brien, was barred from prosecuting this action by the provisions of section 439, Code of Civil Procedure. These matters hereinafter will be specifically noticed in greater detail.

The essential facts involved in this case may be outlined as follows:

On February 1, 1914, James E. Brown and Thomas O'Brien entered into a contract of lease whereby Brown leased to O'Brien certain lands in Imperial county, fully described in the pleadings herein, consisting of 320 acres. The term of the lease was from January 1, 1914, to December 31, 1917. O'Brien agreed to build, construct, and dig upon said land canals or head ditches; to level, border, seed the same to some useful crop not less than 40 acres within 60 days from date of the lease; in default of doing the work within time in such manner as to comply with the rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior for making final proof of desert land entries. O'Brien was to pay all damages occasioned to Brown for loss of land or for delay or inconvenience in obtaining a patent from the government to said land. O'Brien agreed to fill in all arroyos, or natural ditches, to the level of contiguous surrounding land, except a certain large arroyo near the center. Certain percentages of said improvements were definitely indicated for each year of the term of the lease. In case it was found impracticable to fill the large arroyo mentioned near the center to the proper level, O'Brien agreed to terrace it and to border the terrace in the manner specifically stated. This lease was introduced in evidence as Defendant's Exhibit B. O'Brien did not complete the improvements as the agreement required, and on December 4, 1917, the defendant Brown Bros. Incorporation, which had acquired the interests of James E. Brown, the original lessor of said land, made another lease contract with O'Brien. This second lease is Defendant's Exhibit A. This lease recited the making of the first lease, which was about to expire, O'Brien's failure to complete the improvements, his desire to secure a lease for the year, beginning January 1, 1918, to and including December 31, 1918, his promise within said extended term to complete the improvements, expressing his willingness to furnish security for the making and completing said improvements within said last-mentioned term.

There was a provision also for a crop rental and one providing for the deposit with defendant of certain notes and mortgages particularly described in Exhibit A attached to the agreement. This last-mentioned proviso contains the following, to wit: "And in the event said party shall (referring to O'Brien) fail to complete and pay for all of said improvements prior to the first day of August, 1918, then said first party is authorized to complete said improvements and to pay therefor and to collect upon said securities."

Time was made of the essence of this lease. There are other terms and provisions as to maintenance charges, nonremoval of improvements, which need not here be further noticed. The notes and mortgages described in Exhibit A are the securities, the conversion of which is the basis of the present action.

Defendant alleges in its answer that O'Brien's agreements as to the completion of the improvements on time were not completed under this lease on or about the 1st day of August, 1918, and, accordingly, on July 30, 1918, the parties made and executed in writing a third instrument of lease, which again recited all of the preliminary matters contained in the two former leases, the second of which was to expire a few months later; O'Brien's failure to complete the improvements in accordance with these two leases; his desire to obtain a further lease for the term of three years from October 1, 1918, to September 30, 1921, inclusive; and his wish to secure an extension for completing the improvements on or about December 31, 1918; his willingness to furnish security that the improvements would be completed on time. It contains with respect to the improvements and the time for their completion the following:

"Said party of the second part further agrees that he will, on or before the 31st day of December, 1918, complete all of the improvements on the said premises as specified in said lease contract of February 1st, 1914, to which reference is hereby made for further particulars, and as security for the faithful completion of said improvements within said time, and at his own expense, said party of the second part does hereby deposit with said first party certain mortgage notes and mortgages described in Exhibit 'A' attached hereto and made a part hereof, together with appropriate assignments thereof, to said first party, upon the understanding and agreement that it being exceedingly impracticable and difficult to estimate or ascertain the damages which would be sustained by said first party in the event said second party failed to complete said improvements as herein provided, that therefore, in the event said second party shall fail to complete said improvements as herein provided then said first party shall retain said mortgage notes and mortgages as liquidated damages for such breach and shall thereafter hold title thereto and be the owner thereof free from any claim or interest of said second party or any other person, it being expressly represented by said second party that he is the owner of the said notes and mortgages free and clear of any incumbrances whatsoever. * * *

"Time is of the essence of this contract and in the event said party of the second part shall fail to perform any of the terms, covenants and conditions, and acts of agreements by him to be performed, as herein specified, at the time or in the manner specified then said party of the first part may, at his option, elect to declare all of the rights of the said second party of the second part herein, at an end and said party of the second part agrees that he will upon receipt of notice of such election, surrender said premises to said party of the first part and pay all damages which said party of the first part may sustain, or may have sustained by reason of said default, including reasonable attorneys fees and it is agreed that notice, in writing, of such election deposited in the United States mail addressed to said party of the second part, at Brawley, Imperial County, California, shall upon the expiration of fifteen (15) days thereafter be conclusive notice of said election to said party of the second part.

"All of the terms, covenants and conditions herein contained shall run to, bind and inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the respective parties hereto."

On December 8, 1919, the last-mentioned contract was modified by the extension of the term to September 30, 1922, inclusive, with the election reserved to the lessor to terminate it as of December 31, 1921; said election, if made, was to be evidenced by written notice; O'Brien was required to pay certain additional rentals, was released from certain obligations to plant and cultivate alfalfa; and contained other provisions unnecessary to be set out.

It may be observed that in this agreement of December 8th no mention is made of any prior failure on O'Brien's part to make required improvements on time under the terms of the preceding agreements, nor is any mention made of any damages sustained by defendant, nor of any appropriation, conversion, or forfeiture of the said notes and mortgages theretofore assigned by O'Brien to defendant as security.

Defendant, in its answer, pleads that it came into the possession of said notes and securities on or about December 4, 1917, in accordance with the contract of that date, which contained a provision for liquidated damages hereinbefore set out.

The answer describes the land as rough desert land, traversed by deep gullies requiring large quantities of material to fill; alleges that the value, rentability, and salability of such land in Imperial Valley fluctuated greatly from time to time, and it therefore was extremely difficult to fix damages which defendant would sustain by reason of delay in the completion of said improvements. Defendant further alleges that on or about October 31, 1919, he gave said O'Brien the right to acquire the said notes and mortgages by completing the improvements on or about July 30, 1920, as claimed to be shown in a letter written to O'Brien by defendant's counsel on October 31, 1919; that O'Brien did not reply to the letter and did not, prior to August 1, 1920, complete or substantially make any of said improvements; and thereafter and prior to November 1, 1920, the defendant notified O'Brien that the said right and option had expired, that the improvements had not been completed, and that defendant was and at all times subsequent to December 31, 1918, had been absolute owner of said securities, and that O'Brien had no interest therein or right thereto. The answer then sets out in three separate counts, as further and separate defenses, that on November 8, 1929, in the superior court of Imperial county, and on January 14, 1921, in the same court, and on November 7, 1921, in the same court, it had commenced actions at law against O'Brien for the recovery of rent due under the lease contract of July 30, 1918; these actions being numbered 6444, 7137 and 7474. In addition to rent, action No. 7474 was also brought to recover payment for failure to improve the premises with a good stand of alfalfa, as provided in the said contract and extensions thereof. O'Brien in each case was duly served with summons, but failed to defend by answer, and judgment was given against him therein, and in the action at bar it is claimed that, by his failure to set up a counterclaim upon the cross-complaint for unlawful conversion sued for herein, he is barred from maintaining this action and is estopped from asserting any claim or right to any of the securities, or from recovering or asking to recover anything from the defendant.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law of the trial court were in favor of the plaintiff on all the issues presented by the pleadings. It was found, in addition to necessary preliminary matters, that on the 8th day of December, 1917, the notes and mortgages described in the pleadings and agreement were the property of Thomas O'Brien; that on that day they came into the possession of defendant their actual market value was found to be $7,500; that on December 31, 1921, O'Brien was the owner and entitled to the possession of said securities, but that on that date defendant without right converted them to its own use, and thereafter on March 22d disposed of them, converted them into cash and retained the proceeds to the total of $7,500 and interest at 7 per cent. from December 31, 1921. The court also found that defendant was in possession of the said securities in accordance with the lease contract of December 4, 1917, which was thereafter on July 30, 1918, modified, not at O'Brien's request, but by the mutual consent of the parties, and that the contract of July 30, 1918, not at the request of O'Brien, but by mutual consent, was further modified by written contract, dated December 8, 1918; that at all times mentioned in the action defendant was represented by attorneys and counsel, but O'Brien was not represented; found that prior to August 1, 1918, O'Brien had made substantial improvements under said contracts and extensions and modifications, but that all were not completed prior to August 1, 1918; that O'Brien, prior to January 1, 1918, had made substantial improvements, but had not completed all of them, as required by contract.

The court further found it is not true that at any time mentioned in the answer, because of the nature of the case, or otherwise, it was impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damages sustained by defendant by reason of O'Brien's failure to complete the improvements on time, as required in said contracts, but, on the contrary, found it to be true that at all times any and all actual damages, which would have been sustained by reason of said failure to complete the improvements, readily could have been ascertained and determined; found as to the kind and description of the land as of the time of the making of the original contract, and that soon thereafter O'Brien commenced and continued to make substantial improvements in leveling, grading, bordering, ditching, and cropping the land, thereby reclaiming all of said land from its original nonimproved state into well-improved productive agricultural land, so that agricultural crops could be and are successfully grown upon the whole area thereof; that O'Brien within the time specified in the extensions of the original contract graded the large gully and ravine so that the whole area thereof was made irrigable and suitable for farming and production of crops, and that land immediately adjacent to said gully was left well graded and suitable for farming and irrigation without depressed area; found that the rental value of the land depended upon its improvement and that the rental and sale value fluctuated considerably from time to time, but that damages, because of the failure of O'Brien to complete said improvements within the time limit provided in the said contracts, could readily have been ascertained and determined; found that the letter of October 31, 1919, set out in paragraph VIII of the answer, was not in final settlement and compromise of the controversy between O'Brien and the defendant concerning the making of the improvements and the ownership of the securities, and that defendant did not by said letter grant to O'Brien the right to acquire said securities from defendant, or any thereof, by completing the improvement in the contract of February 1, 1914, but that O'Brien did not answer said letter, nor accept, nor express acceptance or ratification of the terms thereof, nor assent to or comply with its terms.

The court further found that prior to August 1, 1920, O'Brien had made substantial improvements, but that the same were not completed; that prior to November 1, 1920, defendant notified O'Brien that the option to O'Brien had expired, and it claimed to be the absolute owner of the securities and that O'Brien had no further interest or claim therein, or right thereto.

The court found as to the other defenses based upon the three rental suits instituted against O'Brien by the defendant that the claim of plaintiff for damages, as set out herein, did not exist at the time of the commencement of said actions respectively; that the claim sued upon in this case did not arise out of the same transaction, which was the foundation of the several rental claims sued for by the defendant herein, plaintiff therein; that O'Brien's failure to set up his counterclaim for conversion as a counterclaim in each of said rental suits did not bar the maintenance of this action against defendant.

The court concluded that Brown Bros. Incorporation, on the 31st day of December, 1921, unlawfully and without right converted all of said promissory notes and mortgages to its own use and benefit and during the month of March, 1922, sold and disposed of all of the same and retained all of the proceeds from the sale thereof to its own use, and that the value of said personal property during all the said time and at the conversion thereof was the sum of $7,500; concluded plaintiff to be entitled to judgment for that amount, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from December 31, 1921; concluded that the provisions of the written contract between Thomas O'Brien and defendant, with the written extensions and modifications thereof, inasmuch as it or they related to or provided for the forfeiture of the securities, were at the time of the making thereof, and are void and in violation of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code of the state of California; that the said letter of the attorneys for the defendant to O'Brien, dated October 31, 1919, does not and did not constitute or form any part of the estate or any contract between said parties.

The remaining conclusions were in accordance with the findings of fact as to the said actions numbered 6444, 7137, and 7474, namely, that the plaintiff's counterclaim in this suit was not passed upon or founded upon any of the contracts, upon which the cause of action in either of said numbered suits is predicated; that defendant is not lawfully entitled to set up or claim as offset or counterclaim the judgment or amount of the judgment in either of said actions; that plaintiff in this case could not lawfully have set up the asserted claim in this action as against the claim of said Brown Bros. Incorporation in either of said actions.

Appellant in a very elaborate and voluminous argument specifies twelve points, as to which he argues that the court erred. It will not be necessary to consider each of these twelve points seriatim, for all the essential issues may be reduced to four points:

(1) Was the provision for liquidated damages in the contract of July 30, 1918, and extensions thereof, void under the provisions of section 1670, Civil Code, or was it within the exception provided by section 1671, Civil Code?

(2) If the provision for liquidated damages was invalid, was the defendant authorized to retain possession of said securities under the terms of the prior lease, dated December 4, 1917, and at all times thereafter until the completion of the improvements by O'Brien?

(3) Did O'Brien ever substantially complete the said improvements as required?

(4) If the defendant at any time prior to the institution of its suits for rent under the contract of September 30, 1918, unlawfully converted the said securities, is O'Brien barred from maintaining this action, because of his failure to counterclaim?

[1] It is apparent from an examination of the liquidated damage provision that, notwithstanding the recital that it was exceedingly impracticable and difficult to ascertain the damages at the time of entering into said contract, the essential character of that provision is that of a penalty. The securities were agreed to be given for the performance of certain labor of a kind not difficult to estimate. Any one familiar with that class of work, especially practical engineers or contractors engaged in estimating and doing such work, readily could ascertain in advance the approximate cost, and, of course, that cost would be the measure of the approximate damage. There is nothing in the nature of the case or the work to be performed, notwithstanding the recital to the contrary, that would seem to make it impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. At any rate, upon that issue, a question of fact was to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence. There was little, if any, evidence adduced upon the part of the defendant at the trial upon the question, but, on the part of the plaintiff, it was shown by the testimony of P. W. Knights, an engineer, that the cost of that kind of work could be determined. He stated that he had made estimates of leveling lands in their desert state, and in partially reclaimed states, for irrigation purposes and for raising agricultural crops of various kinds. His testimony was that it would not be difficult, though tedious, to do the work of reclamation upon this land, and that it would be entirely practicable to make such estimates and to ascertain the cost.

The letter of October 31st of defendant's counsel, which defendant claims in its answer and in the argument, to be a modification of the contract of July 30, 1918, as well as notice to O'Brien on its claim that Brown Bros. Incorporation was the owner of the securities, by reason of his default in making said improvements, demonstrates that the securities were appropriated as a penalty and not as compensation for any damage actually sustained. This letter does not state that any actual damage had been sustained, but merely that the securities "are now the property of Brown Brothers by reason of your default in making said improvements in the manner and within the time limited."

Furthermore in this particular, the testimony of Mr. J. E. Brown, secretary of defendant corporation, is as follows:

"By Mr. Brown (Attorney for Plaintiff): Q. Mr. Brown, you have already testified that these notes and mortgages were delivered to the defendant corporation on or about the 8th day of December, 1917. They were delivered to the defendant corporation by Thomas O'Brien, were they not? A. Yes sir.

"Q. Did the defendant corporation pay Thomas O'Brien anything for the notes and mortgages? A. No, not in cash. They were held as security.

"Q. They were not held as security on any other note? A. It was to secure the performance of a certain contract he had entered into with us for the improvement of 320 acres of land that we owned.

"Q. They were simply put up, as I understand it, as a penalty in the event he didn't complete the contract, is that right?

"Mr. Clark: Objected to as calling for the opinion or conclusion of the witness, and, therefore, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Yes sir.

"Mr. Clark: Did you understand the question that he asked you it was put up as a penalty for not improving the land? A. I don't think I understand that question, then.

"By Mr. Brown: Read the question to him again. (Question read by reporter.) A. They were put up as security.

"Q. Put up as security that he would complete the contract? A. Yes sir, that is it, in the time mentioned in the contract.

"Q. I see. In other words, you were not going to pay him anything for these notes and mortgages, but would keep them if he didn't comply with the contract within the time mentioned. A. That is the idea.

"Mr. Clark: May the answer be stricken out until I can object to it?

"The Court: Make your objection.

"Mr. Clark: Was it under the contract? A. Yes sir.

"Q. By Mr. Clark: Was that contract in writing? A. Yes sir.

"Mr. Clark: Then we object to the question on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and not the best evidence. The contract speaks for itself.

"The Court: Will you read the question to which that objection is made? (Question read by reporter.) In other words, you were not going to pay him anything for these notes and mortgages, but would keep them if he didn't comply with the contract within the time mentioned.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"Mr. Brown: That is all."

When the construction put upon the liquidated damage provision by the parties to the lease and the attorneys for the defendant corporation is examined, it is beyond doubt that that provision was a penalty exacted for the mere lapse of time in making the improvements and not for liquidated damages for any damage, actual or prospective, but, if intended as indicated by the recital in the provision that it was, in effect, intended to be for liquidated damages, the testimony of the two civil engineers, Mr. Rice and Mr. Knights, witnesses at the trial, demonstrate that it was at the time of the making of the contract neither impracticable nor extremely difficult to determine the cost of completing the improvements, which cost would be the only possible measure of damages to the defendant, if any, resulting.

Many authorities are cited by appellant upon the law as to liquidated damages and the case of Wright v. Rodgers, 198 Cal. 137, 243 P. 866, is relied upon to establish the point that, in the agreement under review, "the parties have clearly manifested their intention that the sum fixed therein as damages should be liquidated damages, and in the absence of any ambiguity or uncertainty in its terms this declared intention should control in so far as the intention of the parties is concerned." But that case was one for the breach of a contract for the exchange of real property, and it holds that under section 3387, Civil Code, in such an action, a provision for liquidated damages is presumed to be valid, citing Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. It clearly is distinguishable from this case.

The law of California respecting liquidated damages under section 1670, Civil Code, and section 1671, Civil Code, is well settled. Sherman v. Gray, 11 Cal. App. 348 to 353, 104 P. 1004; Dyer Bros. v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, 189 P. 445; Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 168 P. 114; Long Beach City School Dist. v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 67 P. 499; Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205, 16 P. 890. In the case of Nakagawa v. Okamoto, 164 Cal. 718, 130 P. 707, the rule is stated as follows: "In determining whether a provision in a contract is for liquidated damage or for a penalty, 'the fundamental rule * * * is that the construction of these stipulations depends, in each case, upon the intent of the parties, as evidenced by the entire agreement construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made.'"

The case of Sherman v. Gray, supra, in many respects on its facts similar to the case at bar, says: "It is clearly incumbent upon the party seeking to recover upon such agreement (liquidated damage clause) to show by averment and proof that his case is within the exception." It holds that whether such a clause is valid or not is a question of fact, and further holds, "from the testimony of these witnesses it appears that it was not an impracticable, but on the contrary a simple, matter to ascertain plaintiff's actual damages."

We hold, therefore, that the findings of the trial court that the clause in the contract of July 30, 1918, was invalid to be correct.

[2] The second and third questions may be considered together. James Leslie, the plaintiff, when called as a witness, testified quite fully as to the improvement work done and accomplished by O'Brien over a long period, extending to December 31, 1921. Without setting it forth in detail, it may be said it shows O'Brien had complied in a substantial manner with the requirements for improvements. The land was reclaimed; it was being successfully cultivated, irrigated, and farmed for various crops, such as rice, barley and alfalfa; it was graded, leveled, and in condition for farming operations.

"It is well settled that substantial performance of a contract by one party coupled with retention of the benefits thereof by the other will authorize an action by the former to recover the contract compensation; that in such case recovery may be had upon an averment of full performance though the proof falls short of showing it; and that the remedy of the latter is by counterclaim for his damages or by an independent action before he is sued." Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 156 F. 922, 85 C. C. A. 54.

The answer does not set up by averment any claim of actual damages. The defense seems to rest entirely upon the claimed validity of the liquidated damage provision. If defendant suffered any damage, he should have set it up. In attempting to justify the liquidated damage provision, the defendant points out that, as to the rental values and salability, there were two elements of damage which could not be estimated at the time the contract was made. Such elements seem to us to be somewhat remote and speculative. Section 3301, Civ. Code. All of the evidence shows that in no respect did the defendant sustain even the slightest damage, even though it be admitted that O'Brien defaulted in the performance on time stated in the several contracts. He was permitted, however, to remain undisturbed in his possession. Rents were collected or judgments for rent obtained against him. There was no evidence that any written notice of an election to terminate his tenancy at the expiration of the year 1921 was ever exercised, except that there was evidence of a new lease to a Mr. Butters in 1922. It may be conceded that defendant may have had a right, under the contract of December 4, 1917, to retain possession of said securities until it had received notice of the substantial completion of the improvements. Up to that time it might have taken advantage of the damage clause therein, but, as a matter of fact, it did not do so. We regard as immaterial, therefore, the findings of the court that defendant was not entitled to possession of the securities any time after July 30, 1918.

[3] The claim for unlawful conversion in this action was not, in any legal sense, a counterclaim to any of the three actions for rent, under sections 437, 438, and 422, Code of Civil Procedure, and is not barred by the provisions of section 439, Code of Civil procedure. This view is upheld by a long line of decisions in this state. Bandy v. Westover, 200 Cal. 222, 252 P. 593; Heilbron v. Kings River, etc., Co., 76 Cal. 11, 17 P. 933; Earl v. Times-Mirror Co., 135 Cal. 165, 196 P. 57; Glide v. Kayser, 142 Cal. 419, 421, 76 P. 50; Waugenheim v. Graham, 39 Cal. 169; 34 Cyc. 706-710, on the subject of counterclaim; Clark v. Kelley, 163 Cal. 207, 124 P. 846.

It is unnecessary to notice other arguments of counsel as to whether or not O'Brien was caused to believe by several letters written by defendant's counsel that his time for completing the improvements had been extended.

Under the authorities cited, we hold that the findings of the court as to the counterclaim are correct.

[4] There is an additional contention of counsel for appellant we deem worthy of notice, which is that by counsel's letter of October 31, 1919 (Defendant's Exhibit H), O'Brien confirmed his previous assignment of the deposited securities to appellant so as to pass title thereto, and that the only interest he had left was an option to acquire said securities by the completion of the improvements on or before July 1, 1920; and, inasmuch as the work was not completed within the option period, the option expired and appellant's ownership of the securities was forfeited absolutely.

O'Brien did not reply to nor in any manner manifest acceptance of the terms stated in said letter. His silence, unaccompanied by any act, was not sufficient to indicate that the question of the possession and ownership of said securities was a closed incident in appellant's favor. We quote from 13 Corpus Juris, 276: "An offer made to another, either orally or in writing, cannot be turned into an agreement because the person to whom it is made or sent makes no reply, even though the offer states that silence will be taken as consent, for the offerer cannot prescribe conditions of rejection so as to turn silence on the part of the offeree into acceptance." See, also, Niles v. Hancock, 140 Cal. 157-162, 73 P. 840; Williston on Contracts, p. 168, § 91, and page 172, § 91a, and sections 1580 and 1581, Civ. Code.

We hold, therefore, that this letter did not modify any contract, nor in any manner, or at all, any agreement with O'Brien affecting the possession or ownership of the securities.

To recapitulate, we determine that the findings of the court upon all material issues involved herein must be upheld, namely, that the liquidated damage clause was invalid under section 1670, Civil Code, and not within the exception of section 1671, Civil Code; that defendant unlawfully converted the said securities on the 31st day of December, 1921; that O'Brien on that date had substantially completed the improvements and was entitled to the return of his securities; that defendant failed to establish that it had suffered any damage by reason of O'Brien's failure to comply with the time provisions of the several contracts; that this action is not barred by reason of the alleged failure of O'Brien to file counterclaims against Brown Bros. Incorporation in the rental suits specified.

It appears from a general view of all the evidence in the case that the defendant received and retained the benefits of all improvements made by O'Brien in the years of his tenancy, and by its answer, without right seeks to retain the full value of the securities which were converted to its own use. The trial court's conclusions of law were correct.

The judgment is affirmed.

CANTLAY et al. v. OLDS & STOLLER
INTER-EXCHANGE. (No. L. A. 11637.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1930.

Appeal and error — 799—Appeal will not be dismissed, where evidence was conflicting whether notice of entry of judgment was served on certain date (Code Civ. Proc. § 953d).

Where issue of whether or not, on certain date, respondents served on appellant a notice in writing of entry of judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953d, rested on sharp conflict in evidence, and was between reputable attorneys, motion to dismiss appeal must be denied.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Richard Cantlay and another, co-partners doing business under the firm name and style of Cantlay & Tanzola, against the Olds & Stoller Inter-Exchange. From the judgment, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

J. E. Reardon, Wm. M. Abbott, and K. W. Cannon, all of San Francisco, and Michael F. Shannon and Thomas A. Wood, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. B. Irsfeld and Douglas Fawcett, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. The issue turns upon whether or not on the 19th day of November, 1928, respondents served upon appellant a notice in writing of entry of judgment. Section 953d, Code Civ. Proc. This issue is presented to us by affidavits and counter affidavits of the respective attorneys, aided by the affidavit of a clerk in the office of one of the attorneys, and also by certain notations upon the register of the clerk of the court. No benefit would result from a detailed recital of the claims of the parties. We feel that it is only necessary to say that the issue made rests upon a very sharp conflict of evidence and is between reputable attorneys. To our mind, it is clouded with grave doubt.

This being true, our duty requires a denial of the motion; and it is so ordered.

(L. A. 11812.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1126—Judgment fully complying with Court of Appeals writ of mandate must be affirmed on ground that appeal is frivolous.

In absence of contention that superior court did not fully and accurately follow Court of Appeals writ of mandate to enter judgment ordered on reversal of previous judgment, no issues were left for further litigation, and judgment so entered must be affirmed on ground that appeal therefrom is frivolous; right of appeal being at most a mere naked one.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1126—Motion to dismiss appeal from judgment complying with appellate court's writ of mandate held sufficient as motion to affirm on ground of frivolous appeal.

Motion to dismiss appeal from judgment complying with Court of Appeals writ of mandate to enter judgment ordered on reversal of previous judgment held sufficient as motion to affirm judgment on ground that appeal is frivolous.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by W. S. Lierly and others against D. H. McEwen and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiffs appeal. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Judgment affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, and Siemon & Garber, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Byron Coleman, of San Francisco, and James Donovan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. This action involves the construction of a contract. It is to determine thereunder the respective rights of the parties to oil produced from certain properties and for royalties therefrom.

The cause was tried and judgment entered on February 1, 1924, but upon appeal, on December 21, 1927, it was reversed, with direction that judgment be entered in accord with the opinion filed. Lierly v. McEwen, 87 Cal. App. 711, 262 P. 457. Apparently this was not done, but a different judgment was entered. Thereafter a proceeding in mandamus was filed in the District Court of Appeal, which heard the appeal, to compel the entry of the judgment ordered. On April 2, 1929, upon the hearing a peremptory writ was ordered and duly issued. Lamb v. Owen (Cal. App.) 276 P. 628. On June 20, 1929, the former judgment was set aside and a new judgment was entered in said cause, which fully and accurately met the demands of said writ. From this last judgment, appellants now prosecute an appeal, supported alone by the judgment roll in the action.

[1] It is not contended that the court did not fully and accurately follow the writ of mandate. Under such a situation no issues can be left for further litigation. Heinlen v. Beans, 73 Cal. 240, 14 P. 855; Shank v. Blackburn, 61 Cal. App. 577, 579, 215 P. 559. The most that can be said is that the right of appeal left appellants is a mere naked one. Every issue that can now be made either was or could have been determined upon previous hearings of this cause. Price v. Sixth District, 201 Cal. 502, 258 P. 387.

[2] While the motion is one to dismiss the appeal, it is also sufficient as a motion to affirm the judgment upon the ground that the appeal is frivolous. Tobias v. Adams, 201 Cal. 689, 258 P. 588.

Under the latter head, we have entertained the motion, and, for the reasons above expressed, the judgment is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.

PACIFIC FRUIT EXCHANGE v. F. E.
BOOTH CO. (Civ. 7080.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 2, 1930.

1. Assumpsit, action of — Recovery in assumpsit did not require proof of express promise.

Plaintiff, in order to recover judgment in assumpsit, was not required to prove an express promise on part of defendant.

2. Chattel mortgages — Holder of crop mortgage was not estopped to assert mortgage as against purchaser with actual notice of mortgage.

Holder of crop mortgage was not estopped from asserting mortgage as to crop delivered to purchaser having actual notice of mortgage before earliest time that any interest in crop was attempted to be passed.

3. Chattel mortgages — One appropriating property covered by mortgage within 30 days after removal from county was guilty of conversion (Civ. Code, § 2965).

Appropriation of property covered by chattel mortgage within 30-day period after removal from county in which mortgage was recorded constituted a conversion within Civ. Code, § 2965, allowing 30-day period of grace for recording of mortgage after removal.

4. Chattel mortgages — Tortious severance of mortgaged crops does not destroy lien.

Severance of mortgaged crops, if done tortiously, does not destroy the mortgage lien.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Fruit Exchange against the F. E. Booth Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Athearn, Chandler & Farmer and Frank R. Devlin and Walter Hoffman, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff holds a crop mortgage on the crops of the seasons of 1925 to 1932, inclusive, grown on the ranch of W. J. Smith and wife in Sacramento county. In 1927, defendant, in consideration of money previously advanced, purchased and received from said Smith a part of the pear crop grown on said ranch that year. By this action plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant for the value of the said mortgaged pears after deducting the share tenant's part for maturing the same. Defendant appeals.

[1] The complaint was in three counts. The first sets forth the facts in detail, stating a cause of action in conversion, either upon the theory of a violation of the crop mortgagee's rights or of a violation of a special agreement alleged to have been made between all parties concerned that appellant would hold the pears only for the use and benefit of respondent. The second and third causes of action were common counts in assumpsit. It was not necessary for respondent to prove an express promise on the part of appellant in order to recover judgment in assumpsit. The law implies a promise to pay for the conversion. The evidence therefore supports the findings in favor of respondent upon the common counts. Lehmann v. Schmidt, 87 Cal. 15, 25 P. 161; Chittenden v. Pratt, 89 Cal. 178, 26 P. 626; Corey v. Struve, 170 Cal. 170, 149 P. 48; Fountain v. City of Sacramento, 1 Cal. App. 461, 82 P. 637.

[2] The main contention of appellant upon this appeal is that the respondent is estopped from asserting its mortgage on the pears delivered to defendant in 1927 because of respondent's conduct in permitting the mortgagor, Smith, to sell them in previous years during the existence of the mortgage. The appellant's answer does not plead such an estoppel, but pleads as an affirmative defense that Smith was the ostensible agent of respondent in 1927 and that respondent had for two years prior thereto held out and represented said Smith and wife to be its lawful agents with actual and ostensible authority to sell the pears and receive payment therefor. The court found this defense untrue. The exact nature of the estoppel now claimed by appellant, regardless of what is pleaded in the answer, is not made clear. Assuming that the record before us makes available to appellant all its claims in this respect, the evidence by no means compels the decision that respondent was estopped, either from asserting its mortgage or from disputing Smith's authority to make a valid sale on its behalf. Respondent did allow Smith to sell and retain for his own use the proceeds of some local shipments in 1925 and 1926, but there was no evidence to show any conduct by respondent indicating that such arrangement would be continued throughout the life of the mortgage. In April, 1927, respondent told Smith that this would no longer be permitted. On June 7, 1927, before any of the pear crop had been removed, respondent wrote appellant formally notifying it of the existence of the mortgage and wrote again to the same effect on July 30, 1927. On June 10, 1927, a general conversation about the mortgage was held between the parties, but it resulted in no agreement. The amount in value of pears for which appellant was made responsible to respondent by the judgment appealed from was $2,249.13. Appellant had in previous years advanced Smith more money than the value of fruit delivered by him to it in those years. The excess was carried on its books from year to year as a debt, and was evidenced by unsecured interest-bearing promissory notes. The amount carried over from 1923 was $1,450.42. This was before the date of the present mortgage. The balance carried over from 1926 was $1,937.72. From January 5, 1927, to June 5, 1927, appellant advanced Smith seven further payments of $100 each. Respondent is not charged by the evidence with knowledge of any advances made by appellant to Smith. There appears to have been no agreement of sale, sale, or delivery of the 1927 pear crop to appellant before the time actual notice of the mortgage had been received by appellant. Appellant therefore was only a general unsecured creditor, relying for payment upon the general solvency and credit of Smith. Appellant had nothing for protection against Smith's selling or mortgaging to others the pear crop or any other crop of 1927. Even if the advance of money had given appellant an interest in the crop, appellant would have had more reason to fear that some crop mortgagee would claim an estoppel against it than to claim an estoppel against the owner of a recorded crop mortgage, past or future. Substantially no better reason existed in this case to apply an estoppel for the protection of appellant than to apply one in favor of any other general creditor. While it no doubt is possible for a mortgagee to so conduct himself or to become estopped from asserting his mortgage, it certainly will not be contended that the owner of a valid recorded crop mortgage must occupy himself with giving actual notice thereof to potential or actual general creditors of his mortgagor. This case presents no better reasons for an estoppel than Chittenden v. Pratt, supra, where an estoppel was denied. Actual notice of the recorded mortgage was not necessary to its validity, but it may be considered as rebutting any showing in the direction of estoppel. As the evidence indisputably shows actual notice of the mortgage before the earliest time that any interest in the crop was attempted to be passed to appellant, no claim of estoppel by failure to assert the mortgage can be made.

The appellant's present claim, that respondent, by its conduct in previously allowing Smith to sell pears and keep the money, is estopped from asserting an interest in the crop, is inconsistent with appellant's other claim that Smith was the ostensible agent of respondent. To assert an interest in the crop acquired through Smith as the agent of the mortgagee is to acknowledge the mortgage and mortgagee as the source of title. If appellant claims Smith to be the agent of the respondent, it cannot complain if made to pay that agent's principal for the fruit purchased. The previous advances of money to Smith personally, evidenced by his personal notes, do not constitute payment for fruit purchased from respondent through its alleged agent, Smith.

[3, 4] The mortgage did not become void under Civil Code, § 2965, because it was not recorded in Alameda county before the pears were received there by appellant and put through its cannery. This occurred before the expiration of the 30-day period of grace allowed by Civil Code, § 2965, for the recording of a mortgage in the county to which mortgaged personal property is removed. A chattel mortgage remains good and subsisting for the period of 30 days after removal of the property from the county where the mortgage was recorded. One who purchases such property within such period in the county to which it has been removed is guilty of conversion in appropriating the same. Hammels v. Sentous, 151 Cal. 520, 91 P. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 945. Appellant states that Civil Code, § 2965, does not apply where the goods have been tortiously removed. The severance of mortgaged crops if done tortiously does not destroy the mortgage lien. Bank of Woodland v. Duncan, 117 Cal. 412, 49 P. 414; Campodonico v. Santa Maria Bean & Grain Co., 86 Cal. App. 339, 260 P. 830. We need make no nice decision, therefore, as to whether the pears were converted in Sacramento county or Alameda county. According to the decisions, appellant tortiously severed and converted the pears as against respondent when it purchased them from Smith, received them from Smith, and canned them, even though it may not have manually severed them from the trees and transported them from the ranch. Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 405; Chittenden v. Pratt, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

LIVERIEDES v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 7281.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

Justices of the peace § 140—In perfecting appeal from justice court, it was not necessary to conform to statute, which was neither effective or retrospective in operation (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 988a-988h).

Where appeal was fully perfected before Code Civ. Proc. §§ 988a-988h, inclusive, relating to appeals from municipal courts, became effective, it was not necessary to conform to its requirements, as its operation was not retrospective.

Application for writ of mandate by Teneorios Liveriedes to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Alameda county and another, to compel respondent court and the presiding judge of Department 1 thereof to hear and determine a justice court appeal. Writ granted.

Henri Burkard, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent court and the presiding judge of department 1 thereof to hear and determine a justice's court appeal.

The allegations of the petition are not denied, and are to the following effect: In April, 1929, the justice's court of Brooklyn township, in and for the county of Alameda, rendered a money judgment against petitioner in an action for damages arising out of an automobile collision, and thereafter petitioner took an appeal therefrom to the respondent court upon questions of both law and fact. The notice of appeal and undertaking conformed to the requirements of and were served and filed within the time prescribed by the statute; and the fees of the justice's court were paid. Thereupon and in May, 1929, the justice's court transmitted to and filed with the county clerk of said county a copy of the docket and all of the files and documents necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the respondent court; and the fees of the county clerk for filing the same and placing the cause upon the calendar were paid. But, the petition alleges, the respondent judge refused, on several occasions, to set the cause for trial or to hear or determine the same, and now has under submission a motion made by the plaintiff in the action to dismiss the appeal, which motion, petitioner alleges, the court threatens to and will grant unless prevented as herein prayed.

There has been no appearance on behalf of the respondents in the present proceeding, and consequently the reason for the refusal to entertain jurisdiction of said appeal is not disclosed by the record. Counsel for petitioner has assumed, however, that such refusal is based upon the fact that the record on appeal does not conform to the requirements of the new Code sections enacted at the last session of the Legislature, relating to appeals from municipal courts (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 988a-988h, inclusive). If such be the ground of refusal, it is not tenable, because the appeal was fully perfected and filed in the superior court nearly two months prior to the date on which the new Code sections became operative; and, as held in the case of Blade v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 283 P. 81, which was decided on December 6, 1929, a few days prior to the filing of the petition herein, said Code sections are not to be given a retrospective effect.

In any event, according to the uncontradicted facts set forth in the petition, petitioner is entitled to a trial anew in the superior court. Code Civ. Proc. § 976.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed, commanding that respondents hear and determine said cause in the manner provided in chapter III, title XIII, part II, Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals from justice's courts.

MILLER et al. v. GUSTA et al. (KELLAM et al., Interveners). (Civ. 7116.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 31, 1929.

1. Pleading ⚡8(4)—Allegation that there was adequate consideration for contract for exchange of properties held insufficient, being mere conclusion.

In action for specific performance of contract for exchange of properties, allegation that contract was fair and equitable and that consideration moving from plaintiffs to defendants was adequate consideration for the contract for conveyance held mere conclusion of law and insufficient, since complaint to be sufficient must allege facts which show that contract is fair and consideration adequate.

2. Pleading ⚡433(2)—Insufficiency of allegation of consideration for contract for exchange of properties held not cured by finding that consideration was adequate.

In action for specific performance of contract for exchange of properties, insufficiency of allegation of consideration held not cured by finding that contract was fair and equitable and that consideration was adequate consideration.

3. Trial ⚡395(5)—Findings to be sufficient must state ultimate facts, mere conclusions being insufficient.

Findings of court to be sufficient must state ultimate facts, and conclusions of law cannot take their place.

4. Specific performance ⚡123—In action for specific performance of contract for exchange of realty, furniture, and furnishings, finding that consideration was adequate for conveyance of realty held insufficient to support judgment for plaintiffs (Civ. Code, § 3391).

In action for specific performance of contract to exchange real estate, furniture, and furnishings, finding that consideration was adequate for conveyance of real estate held not sufficient to support judgment for plaintiffs because of failure to find that consideration was adequate for conveyance of furniture as well as realty, since under Civ. Code, § 3391, consideration must be adequate for the whole contract.

5. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Finding of trial court must be accepted, where issue was decided on conflicting evidence.

Appellate court must accept finding of trial court, where issue was decided on conflicting evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Erastus Miller and others against May Gusta and Walter Gusta and others, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint, and Anna J. Kellam and others intervened. Judgment for plaintiffs and the interveners, and named defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part with directions.

Paul Friedman and Arthur Goodrick, both of Los Angeles, and Thomas J. Pitts, of Ontario, for appellants.

William M. Morse, Jr., O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, and Kent Allen, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. This was an action for specific performance of an agreement for the exchange of properties. Plaintiff and respondent Erastus Miller was the owner of a leasehold interest in an apartment house building in the city of Los Angeles, known as the Monroe apartments, and the owner of the furniture and furnishings therein. Defendants and appellants, Gusta, who are husband and wife, were the owners of a lot of land, improved with a building, in the city of Los Angeles, and of the furniture and furnishings therein. The parties agreed to an exchange of these properties, the furniture and furnishings in the Monroe apartments subject to a chattel mortgage for $1,200 and another chattel mortgage to secure the payment of the rent reserved in the lease of the Monroe apartments and the real property of the Gustas subject to a mortgage for approximately $7,500. Pursuant to this agreement, an escrow was opened for the exchange of the documents of title and appellants went into possession of the Monroe apartments. A few days later the appellants repudiated the agreement and notified the escrow holder not to deliver their deed and bill of sale to respondent Miller, and to return to him all documents that Miller had deposited in escrow for delivery to them, and shortly thereafter appellants vacated the Monroe apartments.

The respondents, Miller and wife, brought this suit for specific performance against appellants. Appellants by cross-complaint sought a rescission of the contract charging certain alleged false and fraudulent representations. Intervenors and respondents, who were the owners in fee and lessors of the Monroe apartments, by complaint in intervention, sought and secured the appointment of a receiver to operate the Monroe apartments pending the litigation, asking also to recover one month's rent amounting to $850 from appellant May Gusta, or respondent Erastus Miller, as the court might determine.

After a trial judgment was entered to compel specific performance of the contract to exchange the properties, and against appellants and in favor of intervenors for the sum of $850 to be paid by the escrow holder; that amount having been deposited with the escrow holder by appellants for that purpose prior to the repudiation of the contract by them. From that judgment appellants prosecute this appeal.

[1] The serious question on this appeal is concerned with the allegation of the amended complaint, evidence and finding of the court on the subject of the justness and reasonableness of the contract, and the adequacy of the consideration. The only allegation of the complaint on this subject is in the following language: "That said contract is fair and equitable and that the consideration moving from the plaintiffs herein to the defendant May Gusta is an adequate consideration for the contract for the conveyance to the plaintiffs herein of said East Forty (40) feet of Lot 18, Block 10, of El Centro Tract as hereinabove described."

Appellants interposed a general demurrer and a special demurrer directed to this allegation of the complaint, which was overruled by the court. This action of the court is assigned as error. The demurrer should have been sustained. For this there is an abundance of unbroken authority in this state. The general rule is thus stated in 23 California Jurisprudence, p. 495: "It is not sufficient to allege generally that the contract sought to be enforced is just and reasonable and the consideration adequate; such allegations are regarded as mere conclusions of law; to be sufficient the complaint must allege facts which show that the contract is fair and the consideration adequate, and that it would not be inequitable to enforce it."

In Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, at pages 237, 238, 142 P. 67, the Supreme Court used the following language:

"The defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and this is assigned as error. We think the demurrer should have been sustained. The contract is sued on as an executory agreement to execute a lease, in substance an agreement to grant an estate for years in the parcel of land. The object of the action is to enforce specific performance of this executory agreement. The Civil Code, following the settled doctrine of equity jurisprudence, declares that specific performance of an executory contract cannot be enforced against a party, if he has not received an adequate consideration therefor, or if it is not, as to him, just and reasonable. Section 3391. It is well established as a rule of pleading in such cases that the plaintiff, in order to allege a good cause of action, must set forth facts which show that the consideration provided for in the contract sought to be enforced is adequate, and that the contract is just and reasonable to the defendant. A complaint which fails to state such facts does not state a cause of action to enforce such contract. This does not mean that it must be alleged in hæc verba that the contract was supported by an adequate consideration, and is, as to the defendant, fair and just. These might be held insufficient, but the fact that the contract is such as will satisfy the conscience of the chancellor in the respects mentioned must appear from a proper statement of facts.' (Citing cases.)

"The complaint does not purport to set forth any facts whatever on the subject. The only allegation concerning it is the bald statement 'that said agreement, and the terms and conditions thereof, aforesaid, were and are, in all respects, just, fair, and reasonable between the parties thereto.' This is in the precise form which was condemned as insufficient in the passage above quoted. Doubtless the appellate courts should give the language of a complaint on this subject liberal construction in favor of the action of the court below, where it shows an attempt by the pleader to comply with this requirement. But here we have no attempt to state any facts at all—nothing more than the general language of the statute—a mere conclusion of law without facts to support it."

This rule of pleading has never been departed from and is reaffirmed in Salisbury v. Yawger, 184 Cal. 783, 795, 195 P. 682, and Walker v. Clark, 80 Cal. App. 520, 252 P. 334. In the latter case this court said at page 525 of 80 Cal. App., 252 P. 337: "There has been no departure from the rule that it is necessary to plead sufficient facts to show that the consideration for the contract was adequate."

Measured by this rule of pleading, the allegation of the complaint under attack stated mere conclusions of law and was vulnerable to appellant's demurrer.

[2] Respondents, however, contend that by the introduction of evidence on the subject of the justness and reasonableness of the contract and the adequacy of the consideration without objection appellants are now estopped to raise the question of the sufficiency of the complaint in that regard. We are not unmindful of the doctrine of aider by findings under which the finding of a fact which is litigated without objection has been held to cure a lack of, or defect in, the allegation in the complaint of the fact so found. It is a wholesome rule of law that a party should not be allowed to try a question as if it were properly at issue, and in the event of an adverse decision raise anew the defect in his opponent's pleading which he had chosen to ignore at the time of trial. But the trouble with respondents' argument in this regard is that the finding is open to the same attack which has been made upon the complaint.

The evidence on the question of the value of the leasehold interest in the Monroe apartments was sharply in conflict. Respondents produced evidence which, if believed, gave it a value in excess of the value of appellants' property which was to be exchanged for it. Appellants' evidence was to the effect that the leasehold was worse than valueless because it was impossible to operate the apartments at a profit and pay the agreed rental of $850 per month. In this appellants were considerably corroborated by the first report of the receiver appointed by the court, filed before the trial, which showed that the total gross receipts from the operation of the apartments during July, August, and September, 1926, before paying any expenses, did not aggregate quite enough to pay the rent for those three months and after deducting other running expenses for the period from June 18 to October 5 covered by the report the receiver had on hand $704.39, less than enough to pay a single month's rental. While it is undoubtedly true, as suggested by counsel, that operation through a receiver is ordinarily more costly and less profitable than the same operation would otherwise be, these figures are none the less startling. Even in the face of them, however, we would feel compelled to accept the finding of the trial court upon this conflicting evidence if that finding was sufficient. But, as suggested above, the finding is subject to the same vice as the pleading, in that it follows the identical language of the complaint above set out. In other words, the trial court, instead of finding the facts from which the justness and reasonableness of the contract and the adequacy of the consideration would follow as a conclusion of law, simply found "that said contract is fair, and equitable and that the consideration * * * is an adequate consideration." Under the authorities above quoted this is a bald conclusion of law. It is impossible from this finding for this court to know on appeal what value the court put on any of the properties involved in the exchange. Nor can we even conjecture in view of the sharp conflict in the testimony what values the trial court may have had in mind, or what sort of contract in the trial judge's opinion would be fair and equitable or what consideration adequate. The values might, if they had been found by the trial court, be so disproportionate as to lead this court to disagree with the trial court's conclusion as to the fairness of the contract and the adequacy of the consideration. As to that we are left in the dark.

[3] Findings should be tested by the same rules as pleadings: they should state the ultimate facts and conclusions of law cannot take their place. 24 Cal. Jur. p. 969. In McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 15, at pages 17, 18, 45 P. 14, the court, quoting with approval from Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 286, said: "It has been uniformly held that it is not necessary for the court, in its findings, to present the results of last analysis; but, on the contrary, that it would be sufficient if the court found the facts entering as terms into the legal proposition upon which the prevailing party based his right of recovery. The 'facts' which the court is to find, and the 'facts' which a pleader is to state, lie, according to the decisions in this state, in the same plane; that is, in both connections, facts are to be stated according to their legal effect."

And the court in the McCarthy Case added: "Therefore, to determine the sufficiency of a finding * * * it is only necessary to ascertain what statement of that fact is required in the pleading."

In County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 409, 73 P. 174, 178, the court said of a finding in the same language as an allegation of the complaint: "We are of the opinion that this is a mere conclusion of law, and presented no issue for the consideration of the court below, and that the finding is of no more force than the allegation."

[4] There is another defect in both finding and complaint which, in our opinion, is equally fatal. The complaint alleges and the court found in the language above set out that "the consideration * * * is an adequate consideration for the contract for the conveyance * * * of said east forty feet of Lot 18, Block 10, of El Centro Tract."

Nothing is said about the furniture and furnishings which were also to be transferred by appellants and which the judgment appealed from requires appellants to transfer by bill of sale. Under Civil Code, § 3391, the consideration must be adequate for the whole contract to be performed by the defendant, not for a part of it only. The finding, even if otherwise sufficient, would still not support the judgment, because of the failure to find that the consideration is adequate for the conveyance of the furniture and furnishings as well as the real property involved.

[5] The issue of fraud raised by the cross-complaint was decided against appellants on conflicting evidence, and under the settled rule this court must accept the finding of the trial court on that issue.

The complaint in intervention prayed in the alternative, as above noted, for relief against appellant May Gusta, or respondent Erastus Miller. Since we have determined that so much of the judgment as grants relief to plaintiffs on their amended complaint must be reversed, the portion of the judgment granting relief to interveners against appellant May Gusta should also be reversed to await the final judgment of the court on the issue of specific performance.

It is accordingly ordered that that portion of the judgment denying relief to appellants under their cross-complaint is affirmed, and those portions of the judgment granting relief to plaintiffs and respondents on their amended complaint and to interveners and respondents on their complaint in intervention are reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain appellants' demurrer to the amended complaint of plaintiffs. Appellants to recover their costs on appeal against plaintiffs and respondents, Erastus Miller and Lee Miller, his wife.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 39

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA v. BRYSON. (Civ. 3952.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Subscriptions ⇨10—Where last paragraph of note was executed simultaneously as part of original instrument, entire document must be construed together (Civ. Code, § 1641).

Where last paragraph of subscription note to university endowment fund was executed at same time as, and as part of, original instrument, entire document must, under Civ. Code, § 1641, be construed together in determining its character and effect.

2. Contracts ⇨163—Written portion of document controls printed portion only when written and printed portions are repugnant (Civ. Code §§ 1641, 1651, 1652; Code Civ. Proc. § 1862).

Only when written and printed portions of same document are repugnant does former control latter, under Civ. Code, § 1651, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1862, and, when these separate portions are not absolutely inconsistent, they should, under Civ. Code, §§ 1641, 1652, be reconciled, if reasonably possible, so as to give effect to entire instrument.

3. Subscriptions ⇨5—Written and printed portions of subscription note to endowment fund held not to show note was intended as mere "gift"; "donation" (Civ. Code, § 1146).

Printed portion of note subscribing to university endowment fund stating that it was executed and delivered with express reciprocal condition that other subscribers would execute similar notes with object of raising large fund for equipment and endowment, and written portion stating that amount is donated to be used as endowment fund to further work of foreign missions, held to show note was not intended as mere "gift" without consideration, as defined in Civ. Code, § 1146, since gift is voluntary transfer of property without consideration, but a donation may be founded on consideration (citing Words and Phrases, Third Series, "Donate"; "Donation").

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Gift.]

4. Gifts ⇨1—Use of term "donation" is not conclusive evidence of no consideration, where contrary is evident from instrument.

While a donation is usually a gratuitous transfer of property without consideration, it may be construed to mean more than a mere gift, and where intent of parties to contrary is evident from instrument, mere use of term "donation" will not be accepted as conclusive evidence of absence of consideration (citing Words and Phrases, First Series, "Donate"; "Donation").

5. Subscriptions ☞9—Indorsement on subscription note to endowment fund that donation was made to further work of foreign missions held not to designate purpose beyond scope of charter.

Indorsement on subscription note to university endowment fund that amount was donated to be used as an endowment fund to further work of foreign missions in preaching gospel to people in heathen countries held not to designate purpose beyond scope of university charter authorizing it to engage in education and training for ministry and maintain department of religious education.

6. Subscriptions ☞10—Limitation of subscription to endowment fund to use in furtherance of foreign missions held not in conflict with general purpose for endowment and equipment, where religious training was among regular curricula.

Fact that income from subscription note to university endowment fund was limited to furtherance of foreign missions, or that it may have been restricted to maintenance of department of religious training, held not in conflict with general purpose of endowment fund as expressed in note to be for endowment and equipment of university, where regular curricula of university provided for course of religious training.

7. Bills and notes ☞31—Note may be valid as nonnegotiable instrument, though not containing all provisions necessary to make it negotiable.

Note may be valid as a nonnegotiable instrument, although it does not contain all provisions necessary to make it negotiable.

8. Bills and notes ☞45—Note subscribing to university endowment fund held not invalid because made payable out of estate of maker one day after her death.

Note subscribing to university endowment fund held not invalid because made payable out of estate of maker thereof one day after her death.

9. Bills and notes ☞155—Wills ☞89—Note subscribing to university endowment fund negotiable in form is not testamentary or nonnegotiable merely because not maturing until after maker's death.

Note subscribing to university endowment fund negotiable in form is not testamentary or nonnegotiable merely because it does not mature until after maker's death.

10. Subscriptions ☞4, 18—Absent consideration, promise to pay subscription is generally mere offer, withdrawable any time before acceptance, and promisor's death revokes pledge.

Promise to pay a subscription is ordinarily mere offer, which, in absence of consideration therefor, may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance, and promisor's death revokes pledge.

11. Subscriptions ☞5—Mere individual promise to subscribe to cause, not usually being supported by consideration, is unenforceable.

Mere individual promise to subscribe to cause is not usually supported by consideration, and is therefore nudum pactum and unenforceable.

12. Subscriptions ☞5—Note subscribing to university endowment fund given in consideration of reciprocal promises by others, and conditioned on fulfillment of pledges, held supported by consideration.

Note subscribing to university endowment fund given in consideration of reciprocal promises by others subscribing to $1,000,000 endowment fund for equipment of university, each note being conditioned on fulfillment of pledges by others to raise full amount, held supported by consideration.

13. Subscriptions ☞5—Mutual promise concurred in by several for payment of aggregate sum for benefit of charitable, religious, or educational institution is generally supported by consideration (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Mutual promise concurred in by several individuals to contribute to payment of aggregate sum for benefit of charitable, religious, or educational institution, in which all are interested, is generally supported by adequate consideration, authorizing its enforcement by promisee, in view of Civ. Code, § 1605, defining consideration as any benefit conferred on promisor or any prejudice suffered by promisee.

14. Subscriptions ☞5—University relying on promise to pay, and thereby induced to expend money, perform labor, or incur obligation, held to suffer prejudice constituting consideration for promise (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Where university, relying on promise to pay specific sum for particular purpose, is induced thereby and does expend money, perform labor, or incur obligations incident to purpose for which money was pledged, it necessarily suffers prejudice constituting a consideration for promises to pay, under Civ. Code § 1605, since acts performed and obligations incurred by promisee in reliance on payment of subscription note renders agreement enforceable, and estops promisor from refuting its validity.

15. Subscriptions ☞5—Fact that subscriber's note to endowment fund was not solely relied on when university incurred obligations held not to affect its right to claim estoppel against maker.

Fact that university constructing building and incurring obligations did not rely solely in anticipation of payment of particular subscription note to university endowment fund, but partially relied on payment of other pledges, held not to affect university's right to contend maker was estopped to deny consideration for note, since it is sufficient to create an estoppel, if pledge is substantial cause inducing activity by payee, or if particular pledge, in conjunction with others, induces promisee to perform labor or expend money in carrying out enterprise for which money was pledged.

16. Executors and administrators $\S$ 227(1)—Creditor's claim against estate containing copy of subscription note to endowment fund and stating conditions were fulfilled held sufficient to support action thereon (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1494).

Creditor's claim containing complete copy of note subscribing to university endowment fund, together with statement that subscription note was delivered to and accepted on terms and for purposes therein set forth, and that entire sum was pledged in fulfillment of conditions, held sufficient under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1494, relating to filing of creditors' claims against estate, to support action thereon.

17. Subscriptions $\S$ 21(4)—In action on subscription note to university endowment fund, allegations of complaint held to warrant admission of evidence showing obligations incurred in reliance thereon.

In action on subscription note to university endowment fund, allegations of complaint setting out note in full and nonpayment thereof that, on faith of subscription, together with other subscriptions, plaintiff erected building, purchased equipment, employed teachers, and equipped specific department, held sufficient to warrant admission of evidence regarding performance of work, incurring of obligations in reliance on promise, so as to furnish consideration therefor and to create an estoppel to deny its validity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by the University of Southern California against Frank Bryson, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Sarah P. Livingston, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles (Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, of counsel), for appellant.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff on a note representing a $200,000 subscription to an endowment fund for the University of Southern California.

Sarah P. Livingston executed and delivered to the university the following note:

"Estate Note Sarah P. Livingston.

"University of Southern California Million Dollar Jubilee Campaign.

"Los Angeles, May 24th, 1918.

"In consideration of my interest in Christian education and in consideration of others subscribing toward raising of a Million Dollars for endowment and equipment for the University, I hereby subscribe and will pay to the University of Southern California, at Los Angeles, California, the sum of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars ($200,000.) on the following terms and conditions:

"1. The entire sum of One Million Dollars asked, shall be pledged on or before June 12, 1918.

"2. This subscription shall be due and payable one (1) day after my death, and out of my estate. Name: Sarah P. Livingston, 1245 Stevenson Ave. Address: Redondo Beach District: Pasadena, Cal. Charge: California.

"Witness: John Hedley."

Indorsement in writing on reverse side:

"The sum of Two Hundred Thousand Dollars ($200,000) is donated to the Board of Trustees, University of Southern California, with the distinct provision that the full amount shall be used as an endowment fund to further the work of Foreign Missions, in the preaching of the Gospel to people in heathen countries, as may be hereafter determined by the Board of Trustees, University of Southern California.

"[Signed] Sarah P. Livingston.

"May 24th, 1918.

"Witness: John Hedley."

The entire fund of $1,000,000 was subscribed before June 12, 1918. Notice of an acceptance of the Livingston subscription was sent to her. Relying upon the payment of these notes, an administration building was commenced, college courses enlarged, and obligations incurred by the university. Mrs. Livingston died May 25, 1923. Upon proceedings duly had, an administrator of her estate was duly appointed and qualified. June 3, 1924, a verified claim for her note, which was fully described therein, was presented for payment June 11, 1924, and disallowed. This action was then commenced, and upon trial the court rendered judgment against the defendant for $200,000 and 7 per cent. interest thereon from June 11, 1924, from which judgment this appeal was perfected.

The appellant contends that (1) the subscription note was without consideration, and is therefore nudum pactum; (2) the condition of the notes to secure pledges for the aggregate sum of $1,000,000 was not fulfilled; (3) the doctrine of estoppel may not apply, since the payee did not perform any acts or incur obligations in anticipation of the fulfillment of the specific purpose for which the particular subscription was made; (4) the purpose for which the pledge was made is not within the authorization of the university charter; and (5) the creditor's claim upon which the action is founded will not support a plea of estoppel.

[1] The last paragraph of the foregoing copy of the subscription note or agreement was written at the request and in the presence of Mrs. Livingston by a minister of the Methodist church, and was executed at the same time and as a part of the original instrument. The entire document must therefore be construed together in determining its character and effect. Section 1641, Civ. Code; McAuliff v. McFadden, 42 Cal. App. 505, 511, 183 P. 870; 8 C. J. 191, § 323.

It is asserted that the written portion of the subscription note in the present case is repugnant to the purpose for which the general university fund was raised, as appears from the printed portion of this and other notes uniform in that respect which were executed by the subscribers, and that the indorsement on this note specifically designates the nature of the transaction as a "donation," which means a gift, and precludes the possibility of contending that it was founded upon a consideration. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 598.

[2-4] Where a contract is partly written and partly printed, and the written matter is repugnant to the printed portion, the former will control. Section 1651, Civ. Code; section 1862, Code Civ. Proc. It is only when written and printed portions of the same document are repugnant, however, that the former controls. When these separate portions are not absolutely inconsistent, they should be reconciled, if reasonably possible, so as to give effect to the entire instrument. Sections 1641 and 1652, Civ. Code; 13 C. J. 536, § 498; 6 Cal. Jur. 280, § 172; Flinn v. Mowry, 131 Cal. 481, 484, 63 P. 724, 1006. Construing the entire instrument in this manner, it is quite apparent the note was not intended as a mere gift without a consideration, as that term is defined in section 1146 of the Civil Code. It was executed and delivered with the express reciprocal condition that other subscribers would execute similar notes with the object of raising a million-dollar fund for the "endowment and equipment" of the University of Southern California. This would furnish a consideration for the note. A gift is a voluntary transfer of property without consideration (section 1146, Civ. Code; 12 R. C. L. 923, § 1), but a donation may be founded on a consideration. (28 C. J. 621, § 2; 3 Words and Phrases, Third Series, 19; Spilers v. Woodhill, 71 Mo. App. 373; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Anderson County (Tex. Civ. App.) 174 S. W. 305, 315). A donation is not necessarily a mere gift. While it is true that a donation is usually a gratuitous transfer of property without consideration (1 Bouv. Law Dict. 924; 3 Words and Phrases, First Series, 2181), yet it may be construed to mean more than a mere gift. Where the intent of the parties to the contrary is evident from the instrument, the mere use of the term "donation" will not be accepted as conclusive evidence of an absence of consideration.

[5] We think that the language of the written indorsement on the note in this case neither destroys its validity on the ground that it requires an application of its funds to a purpose different from that which was designated in the pledges for the balance of the general jubilee endowment fund, nor for the reason that it designates a purpose beyond the scope of authority which is conferred upon the university by its charter. The University of Southern California was organized as a denominational institution "under the control and management * * * of the Southern California Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church." It was empowered to receive and hold property "for educational purposes * * * or for the endowment of the corporation or the institutions under its control." It was authorized to "establish separate colleges or departments or institutions for the study of every and all learned and liberal professions * * * and for any scientific or other educational purposes." The express purposes for which the university was incorporated included education and training for the ministry. A department of religious education was maintained prior to the raising of the $1,000,000 jubilee fund. The first printed line of the note which was signed by each of the contributors reads, "In consideration of my interest in Christian education, * * * I hereby subscribe," etc. The indorsement provides that the "amount (of $200,000) shall be used as an endowment fund to further the work of Foreign Missions. * * *" It is unreasonable to hold that this subscription was limited to the actual "preaching of the Gospel in heathen countries." The university had no such authority, and it was not its practice to send out or maintain ministers to preach the gospel. Mrs. Livingston must be deemed to have known this and to have understood the clear printed language of the note which she signed. In this note she declared "I subscribe" $200,000 to the University of Southern California "for endowment and equipment" of that institution. With these circumstances in view we are convinced the language of that indorsement should be construed to mean "the full amount (of the $200,000 contribution) shall be used as an endowment fund to further the work of Foreign Missions (in their service), in the preaching of the Gospel to people in heathen countries." This construction is in accord with good reason, and tends to uphold, rather than destroy, the validity of the instrument. The work of foreign missions would be furthered by the education and training of not only ministers through the maintenance of a department of religion, but also by the training of secretaries, medical missionaries, and the teaching of foreign languages and customs of the people in the fields in which the students plan to work. This purpose is strictly within the express powers which are conferred upon the university by its charter. Any other construction of this instrument would disregard the plain language of the face of the note and destroy the entire $1,000,000 endowment fund, for each separate contribution was conditioned upon the raising of the maximum sum.

[6] The fact that the income from the $200,-

000 subscription was limited to the furtherance of foreign missions, or that it may have been restricted to the maintenance of a department of religious training, is not fatal to the validity of the instrument or in conflict with the general purpose of the entire jubilee fund. That fund was for the "endowment and equipment" of the university. Among the regular curricula of this educational institution was the course for religious training. The designated use of this particular subscription was therefore included in the purpose for which the general fund was raised, and for which the university was maintained.

In anticipation of the payment of these subscription notes into the general jubilee fund, of which the Livingston contribution was a substantial part, a new administration building was commenced in 1919, and completed in 1921, at an expense of $620,000. In this building a classroom was assigned for teaching religion and preparing students for missionary work. In anticipation of the payment of the Livingston contribution in particular the work in the department of the school of religion was greatly enlarged. Classes for the study of the aims and needs of foreign missions were added, together with instruction in the languages and customs which prevail in such fields. The plan for education in this department was reorganized under the title of "The Church and Its Program." Dr. von KleinSmid, the president of the university, testified that these courses were intended "for the preparation of young men and young women for service in foreign missions." The board of trustees approved this plan. The missionary course included study under Dr. Fisher of "Heroes of the Mission Fields; their history and times; their consecration, preparation, problems, methods, work and achievement." A library, equipment, and several instructors were added to this department. The increased cost of this entire change in the religious department could not be paid from the Livingston subscription alone. But these changes were made and the increased cost of the department incurred in anticipation of, and in reliance upon, the substantial aid of her contribution. The president of the university said: "The entire program (affecting the church and missions) was in part relying on the Livingston donation." It was unnecessary that the obligations should be incurred and the changes adopted in reliance solely upon the Livingston portion of the fund.

The activities of the university above mentioned were in furtherance of the work of foreign missions; they were in compliance with the conditions of the Livingston note, and not in conflict with the purpose for which the general endowment fund was raised, or the authorized powers of the educational institution.

It is contended that the instrument in question is testamentary in character; that it is a mere executory promise, without consideration, to give a sum of money to the university, which was revocable at the option of the promisor at any time before acceptance, and which was canceled by her death.

[7] A note may be valid as a nonnegotiable instrument, although it does not contain all the provisions necessary to make it negotiable. 8 C. J. 41, subd. 20. A written instrument is presumptive evidence of consideration. Section 1614, Civ. Code. The burden of showing a want of consideration sufficient to support the instrument lies with the party seeking to invalidate or avoid it. Section 1615, Civ. Code.

[8, 9] The note was not invalid because it was made payable out of the estate of the maker thereof, one day after her death. A negotiable instrument is deemed prima facie to have been issued for a valuable consideration. Section 3105, Civ. Code. An instrument which is negotiable in form is not rendered testamentary or nonnegotiable merely because it does not mature until after the death of the maker. 19 Cal. Jur. 814, § 17; 1 Daniel on Negotiable Inst. (5th Ed.) 53, § 46; Buchtel College v. Chamberloix, 3 Cal. App. 246, 84 P. 1000; Nassano v. Tuolumne County Bank, 20 Cal. App. 603, 130 P. 29; 3 R. C. L. 907, § 94.

[10-12] A promise to pay a subscription is ordinarily a mere offer which, in the absence of a consideration therefor, may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance. Under such circumstances the death of the promisor revokes the pledge. A mere individual promise to subscribe to a cause is not usually supported by a consideration, and is therefore nudum pactum and unenforceable. 23 Cal. Jur. 954, § 2; 25 R. C. L. 1399, § 6; Grand Lodge I. O. G. T. v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 158, 11 P. 592. In the present case, however, the subscription note of Mrs. Livingston is not void. It was founded upon a well-recognized consideration, which was the reciprocal promises of each of the contributors to the general jubilee fund to participate to the extent of their respective pledges in the raising of a definite sum of $1,000,000. This condition was so specified in the several notes. The note of each subscriber was conditioned upon the fulfillment of the pledges of the others to raise the full amount of $1,000,000.

[13] A mutual promise concurred in by several individuals to contribute to the payment of an aggregate sum for the benefit of a charitable, religious, or educational institution, in which they are all interested, is generally held to support an adequate consideration authorizing its enforcement by the promisee. Christian College v. Hendley, 49 Cal. 347; 37 Cyc. 488; 6 R. C. L. 676, § 84; 38 A. L. R. 906, note VI. This doctrine, which is termed "a promise for a promise," is criticized by certain text-writers, but it is evidently approved by the California courts. The Christian College Case, supra, has been favorably cited on this point in West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 19, 32, 21 P. 1123, and in Matzen v. Morton Building Co., 28 Cal. App. 330, 152 P. 317. The principle is also supported by a large number of authorities which are cited in support of the text in Ruling Case Law, supra, and in the Permanent Supplement thereto.

Appellant claims this is not the law in California; that the case of Grand Lodge I. O. G. T. v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 158, 11 P. 592, overrules the Christian College Case. We cannot agree with this assertion. The Grand Lodge Case is clearly distinguishable from both the Christian College Case and the present action. The facts which appear in the Grand Lodge Case indicate that Farnham signed a mere subscription paper agreeing to pay $1,000 toward building a Good Templars' Home for Orphans. Other subscribers at the same time signed similar papers. There is nothing in the record to show that the document which he signed had any reference to other subscription papers, or was conditioned upon the raising of any specific fund, or upon other subscribers participating therein. No mutual or reciprocal obligation is mentioned. Unlike the present case, no reference was made to the execution of other pledges, or to the purpose for which the fund was being raised. Nor does it appear that any work was commenced on the building or obligations incurred before the death of Farnham. In that case no promise for a promise appears; no obligations were incurred; and no acts in reliance upon the fulfillment of the pledge were performed. Under such circumstances, clearly the promise was without consideration and void. After declaring that "a promise to pay a subscription like that declared on here is a mere offer, which may be revoked at any time before it is accepted by the promisee," the court said: "The rule is otherwise when subscribers agree together to make up a specified sum, and where the withdrawal of one increases the amount to be paid by the others," and that "an acceptance can only be shown by some act on the part of the promisee whereby some legal liability is incurred or money is expended on the faith of the promise."

While American authorities are not in entire harmony as to the validity of these subscription agreements, the modern trend and the weight of authorities support the theory that the reciprocal agreements of the several subscribers or the subsequent performance of labor or incurring of obligations on the part of the promisee in reliance upon the pledge to pay furnishes a sufficient consideration therefor, or an estoppel to deny the validity thereof. Upon the contrary, English cases regard subscriptions to charity and similar causes as mere promises without consideration which may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance, and which are therefore nudum pactum. Re Hudson, 54 L. J. Ch. (N. S.)

511. The earlier American cases follow this rule. The trend of modern authorities holds the contrary. Later authorities tend to uphold these subscription agreements for the benefit of charitable and educational institutions. In 38 A. L. R. 869, note, it is said: "The tendency now is to uphold subscriptions as valid and enforceable, whenever that can be done without overstepping entirely established rules requiring consideration to uphold executory contracts. * * * Consideration is supplied where upon faith of the subscriptions moneys have been expended, liabilities incurred, or work performed. * * * Other courts have found consideration in the mutual promises of the subscribers." Some cases distinguish between a mere promise to pay a specified sum regardless of the aggregate fund to be raised and a promise to participate in the raising of a specific amount where each separate pledge becomes an inducement for others to subscribe.

Section 1605 of the Civil Code defines the term "consideration" as any benefit conferred on the promisor or any prejudice suffered by the promisee.

[14] When the subscription of an individual aids the organization, endowment, or maintenance of a local charitable, religious, or educational institution in which he is interested, it may be said he receives an indirect benefit therefrom. These are semipublic organizations which are recognized as beneficial to society. Nebraska Wesleyan University v. Griswold, 113 Neb. 256, 202 N. W. 609, 38 A. L. R. 858; Amherst Academy v. Cowls, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 427, 17 Am. Dec. 387. So also it may be said that, when an institution relying upon a promise to pay a specific sum for a particular purpose is induced thereby, and does expend money, perform labor, or incur obligations incident to the purpose for which the money was pledged, it necessarily suffers prejudice in so doing. This detriment is deemed by section 1605 of the Civil Code to constitute an adequate consideration upon which to enforce the agreement.

Acts performed and obligations incurred by a promisee in reliance upon the payment of a subscription note renders the agreement enforceable, and estops the promisor from refuting its validity. 25 R. C. L. 1401, § 8; 37 Cyc. 486-B; Lasar v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 549, 58 P. 161; Buchtel College v. Chamberloix, 3 Cal. App. 246, 84 P. 1000; 38 A. L. R. 881, note; Furman University v. Waller, 124 S. C. 68, 117 S. E. 356, 33 A. L. R. 615, note 625.

[15] The appellant contends that the changes in the religious program of the university, the labor performed, and the obligations incurred in the construction of the administration building and otherwise were not solely in anticipation of the payment of the Livingston note, but were partially in reliance upon the payment of other pledges and therefore furnished no ground for estoppel.

It is true that this performance was only partially in reliance upon the payment of the Livingston note. It is, however, not necessary that a particular subscriber's promise should be the sole inducement for the performance of work or the incurring of obligations. It is sufficient to create an estoppel if it is a substantial cause inducing the activity on the part of the payee, or if the particular pledge in conjunction with others induces the promisee to perform labor or expend money in carrying out the enterprise for which the money is pledged. Furman University v. Waller, 124 S. C. 68, 117 S. E. 356, 33 L. R. A. 615.

It is asserted that the condition of the note that $1,000,000 should be pledged for the endowment and equipment fund of the university was not complied with. We cannot agree with this. The aggregate sum of $1,148,834 was subscribed. This sum included the $200,000 note in question, which was primarily a contribution to the endowment and equipment fund from which the obligations for maintaining a department for religious training and for furthering the work of foreign missions were paid. This note was therefore properly included in the general fund. The aggregate amount also included a note of $100,000 signed by W. T. Watts, which is challenged. In January, 1919, after the fund had been completed, Mr. Watts and the university entered into a written agreement by the terms of which real property was conveyed to the university, apparently in satisfaction of this note, conditioned upon the grantor retaining the rents and income therefrom during his lifetime. There is evidence that this property was worth "much more than $100,000 to the University." This was not denied, for, when plaintiff called a witness to establish its value, this colloquy occurred between counsel: "Mr. Scarborough: We have testimony here that the value of the property was over $100,000. Mr. Holbrook (attorney for defendant): * * * If it makes any difference, it amounted to more; it does not make any difference whether it amounted to less." It should therefore be assumed that the defendant accepted this property as of a valuation in excess of $100,000. Two other items are challenged, to wit, $57,464 in notes, for which the university was obligated to extend scholarship privileges under which it waived the usual tuition charges. There were also subscriptions amounting to $32,800, to which obligations on the part of the university were imposed to pay annuities to the makers thereof in the form of interest. The last two items aggregated $90,264. While the principal represented by the last two classes of notes became a part of the general endowment fund, it may be said the income therefrom was not presently available, and there may be merit in saying these notes, because of their conditions, did not comply with the purpose of raising a $1,000,000 fund as declared by the notes. However, deducting these sums, there would still remain a fund of $1,058,570. Considering the evidence as a whole, we are of the opinion that the findings of the court that $1,000,000 endowment and equipment fund was subscribed before June 12, 1918, is adequately supported by the evidence. The note merely required the fund to be pledged.

[16, 17] Finally, it is contended the form of the creditor's claim was insufficient upon which to maintain this action, and that there was a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the evidence adduced, in that the complaint failed to adequately set out the particulars upon which the claimant relied, to wit, the doctrine of estoppel which would be raised by the proof of the performance of labor or the incurring of obligations by the payee in reliance upon the payment of the note.

The creditor's claim contained a complete copy of the note upon which the action was founded, together with the statement that the subscription note "was delivered to and accepted by the University * * * upon the terms and for the purposes therein set forth, and that the entire sum of $1,000,000 asked was pledged on or before June 12, 1918, in fulfillment of the conditions thereof. * * *" This was a sufficient compliance with section 1494, Code of Civil Procedure. 11 Cal. Jur. 704, § 411; Crocker-Woolworth National Bank v. Carle, 133 Cal. 409, 65 P. 951; Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 249, 88 P. 911. The consideration of the note was presumed. Nor was there a variance in the proof of the allegations of the complaint which set out the note in full and the non-payment thereof and recited that, "upon the faith of and relying upon the said subscription, with other subscriptions to said fund, the plaintiff * * * erected a building and purchased equipment for the same * * * and employed teachers, and equipped a department to further the work of foreign missions in the preaching of the Gospel to people in heathen countries." These allegations were sufficient upon which to admit evidence of the performance of work and the incurring of obligations in reliance upon the promise to pay the note so as to furnish consideration therefor and estop the denial of its validity.

MOLEMA v. MOLEMA. (Civ. 7050.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 7, 1930.

1. Judgment ⇨405—Order or judgment cannot be annulled, except on legal grounds, and statute authorizing modification is measure of court's jurisdiction.

An order or judgment, solemnly entered after hearing, cannot be annulled, either expressly or by indirection, except on legal grounds, and, when statute authorizes a modification on specified grounds, statute is the measure of the court's jurisdiction.

2. Divorce ⇨245(2)—Authority to modify allowance for alimony does not include right to alter award on state of case existing when decision was entered.

Authority of court to modify allowance for alimony does not include the right to alter award on state of case existing when decision was entered, or to review action of chancellor therein, in that parties had their day in court, with the right of appeal, and it cannot be supposed that it was intended that court should sit in review of its own decisions.

3. Divorce ⇨245(3)—Order modifying decree, so as to eliminate provision for alimony, held erroneous, in view of evidence.

Order modifying decree in respect to alimony in divorce action, so as to render order involving alimony ineffective, held erroneous, in view of evidence failing to establish any ground for modification by reason of change in conditions existing at time decree was entered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Divorce action by Hulda S. Molema against Herman G. Molema. Decree of divorce, and from an order annulling portions of the decree, awarding alimony, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel D. Hamburg, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order annulling portions of decrees of divorce awarding her alimony.

On May 28, 1914, the plaintiff was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce from the defendant upon grounds of cruelty. The complaint for divorce pleaded the ownership of two parcels of property, one of which was alleged to be community property, and the other was alleged to be the separate property of the wife, and also alleged defendant's ability to pay alimony. The decree made no disposition of the community property, but cleared plaintiff's title to the parcel claimed as her separate property, and awarded her alimony in the sum of $25 a month. This sum was paid more or less irregularly until August, 1927, when, defendant being $225 in arrears, he was cited to appear in contempt proceedings. He thereupon gave notice of motion to strike from the decrees the provisions relating to alimony. This motion was based upon three grounds: Inadvertence; that defendant was then unable to make the payments; and that plaintiff does not require the same. The motion was heard at the same time as the order to show cause.

The trial court found that defendant was delinquent to the extent of $200. This finding was manifestly a clerical error, because it was stipulated in open court that the amount in arrears was $225. The trial court then entered its judgment reading as follows: "It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the motion of said defendant to eliminate from said decrees so much thereof as requires him to pay plaintiff the sum of $25 per month be, and the same is hereby granted, and said interlocutory and final decrees are hereby amended by striking therefrom such requirement." The appeal is from this order.

Appellant claims the order was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, because it in terms undertook to change the wording of the original interlocutory and final decrees of divorce, instead of making and ordering a proper modification as of the date of the motion. Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal. App. 106, 87 P. 205; Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 P. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70; Cohen v. Cohen, 150 Cal. 99, 88 P. 267, 11 Ann. Cas. 520. This point, if well taken, would only require a modification of the order appealed from, as was done in the Soule Case.

[1, 2] But we do not need to draw any nice line of distinction between the expressions "modification," "suspension," and "annulment," because the order appealed from, though denominated a modification of the interlocutory and final decrees, is, in legal effect, an annulment of the portions of those decrees relating to alimony. The case here is to be decided on general principles. The rule is uniform that an order or judgment, solemnly entered after hearing, cannot be annulled, either expressly or by indirection, except upon legal grounds, and, when the statute authorizes a modification on specified grounds, the statute is the measure of the court's jurisdiction. 15 R. C. L. pp. 720, 721.

But authority to modify the allowance for alimony "does not include the right to alter the award upon the state of case existing when the decree was entered, or to review the action of the chancellor therein. The parties had their day in court, with the right of appeal, if the decree was deemed erroneous, and it cannot be supposed that it was intended that the court should sit in review of its own decrees, or that the same or some succeeding chancellor presiding in the same court should, after the lapse of indefinite time, have power to reverse, alter, or modify a decree for alimony upon the facts existing at the time of its entry." 1 R. C. L. p. 948.

[3] Here the motion was noticed on three separate grounds, and not a word of evidence was offered or received which supports any one of them. No inadvertence was attempted to be shown. The undisputed evidence upon the ground of respondent's ability to pay showed that his earnings had greatly increased and that his burdens were less. Upon the ground of appellant's need the evidence was without conflict that she was unable to earn a salary adequate for her support, that she had no property or income, and that because of sickness and a capital operation, which she had to undergo, she had been unable to work at all for a period of six months preceding the hearing. There is no evidence of any character which even remotely supports any ground for a "modification" of the decrees, and, when this is so, it is error to so modify the decrees as to render the order involving alimony ineffective. The principle of law involved is that, when a court has once acted after hearing the merits of a controversy, the action cannot be set aside or modified in matters of substance, except upon legal grounds, and that, when the Code section authorizes the court to modify its orders for alimony, it contemplates a legal showing, "having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively."

The order is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. M. Willis, Judge.

Action by W. H. Daum against the Weber Showcase & Fixture Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Spencer Thorpe and Roane Thorpe, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lowenthal, Collins & Lowenthal and Victor Ford Collins, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. This is an action for the recovery of a broker's commission claimed to be due under the terms of a written instrument. Judgment was rendered against the plaintiff, who appeals. The instrument in question was signed by W. H. Daum, appellant herein, and Weber Showcase & Fixture Company, by Fred Weber, wherein appellant was appointed exclusive representative to sell certain real property, and the Weber Showcase & Fixture Company, a Delaware Corporation, agreed to refer all inquiries regarding sale of the property, to Daum, for negotiations, and that if sale, lease, or disposition of the property were made and accepted by the corporation during the term or continuance of the agreement, the corporation agreed to pay a specified commission therefor. It was further stipulated that the agreement was to remain in full force until February 1, 1923, and thereafter until canceled by either party giving 30 days' notice in writing. It is admitted that notice of termination was given by the corporation on February 27, 1923, and became effective 30 days thereafter. Appellant urges as a ground for reversal that the agreement was binding upon the parties, and that the corporation, during the life of the agreement, failed to refer to him for negotiations all inquiries received by it, but that the respondent negotiated a lease itself, and is therefore liable to appellant for the commissions provided. The court found: "That no sale, lease or disposal of the property was made or accepted by the defendant during the term or continuation of the agreement of July 24, 1922; that when the lease of October 30, 1923, was made, the agreement of July 24, 1922, was in all respects terminated and canceled, and of no force and effect." And also: "The court finds that there was no fraud upon the part of the defendant in negotiating with the said C. W. Nibley; that no agreement as to the matter of leasing said property was reached between the said C. W. Nibley and the said defendant until after the termination of the agreement between the defendant and the plaintiff." Appellant directs a portion of his argument, and considerable testimony was taken, to show that negotiations were had during the life of the agreement, but determinative of the question here raised is that the agreement in question is not the instrument of Weber Showcase & Fixture Company, a corporation.

[1] The complaint sets forth, in legal effect, the agreement sued upon, and the answer of the corporation denies that it executed the particular instrument set forth, and it thereupon became essential to plaintiff's cause of action to prove the identity and validity of the instrument so relied upon.

[2, 3] At the time of the execution of said agreement there was no written agreement, memorandum, or minutes of the corporation authorizing Fred Weber to execute said agreement or to sign the name of the corporation, Weber Showcase & Fixture Company, thereto (section 2309, Civ. Code), and a corporation can confer authority upon an agent for that purpose only through its board of directors acting as such by resolution duly passed and recorded, and a ratification of such an act by an agent can be made only in like manner. Salfield v. Sutter, etc., Land Co., 94 Cal. 546, 29 P. 1105.

[4] It appearing that the power and authority to be conferred by the agreement falls within the inhibitions of section 1624, Civil Code, and section 2309, Civil Code, plaintiff cannot maintain his position, and the judgment is affirmed.

BUZBY v. LEWIS et al. (Civ. 56.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨238(3)—Allegation that, at time of collision, defendant's truck was traveling on left-hand side of road, did not of itself charge negligence (California Vehicle Act, §§ 122, 124, 125).

Allegation that, at time of collision with plaintiff's automobile, defendant's truck was traveling on its left-hand side of road, did not of itself charge negligence, since it is lawful to so drive motor vehicle under some circumstances under California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) §§ 122, 124, 125.

2. Automobiles ⇨238(5)—Allegation defendant's truck was traveling approximately 40 miles per hour did not charge negligence under law regulating speed according to weight (California Vehicle Act, § 118).

Allegation that defendant's truck colliding with plaintiff's automobile was traveling at negligent rate of speed of approximately 40 miles per hour did not charge negligence under California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 118, providing speeds at which trucks of given weight may be driven, where it did not appear that truck with its load was of weight equal to, or in excess of, minimum provided.

3. Automobiles ⇨238(5)—Allegation defendant's truck striking plaintiff's automobile was traveling 40 miles per hour charged negligence per se (California Vehicle Act, § 113).

Complaint alleging that defendant's truck striking plaintiff's automobile was traveling at speed of approximately 40 miles per hour alleged prima facie violation of California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517) § 113, in force at time of accident, and therefore charged defendant with negligence per se in operation of truck so that complaint was sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; J. S. Larew, Judge.

Action by Thos. A. Buzby against William Lewis, also sometimes known as A. J. Lewis, and another, doing business under the name of the Desert Express, and others, for personal injuries and property damages arising out of an automobile accident. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

M. W. Conkling, of San Diego, and Kendall B. Perkins, of El Centro, for appellants.

Frank Birkhauser, of El Centro, for respondent.

MARKS, J. In this action respondent sought judgment for personal injuries and property damages alleged to have resulted from a collision between his automobile and a truck belonging to appellants. Judgment was rendered for respondent against William Lewis only. The case comes up on the judgment roll, and the only question presented for our consideration is the sufficiency of the complaint to sustain the judgment, appellants maintaining that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

It is alleged by respondent that on or about the 23d day of September, 1925, he was riding in his automobile driven and operated by his son with due care and caution along a public highway running in an easterly and westerly direction between the city of Holtville and the town of Winterhaven in Imperial county, Cal.; that appellants "carelessly and negligently caused a Moreland automobile truck propelled by a gasoline engine, said truck being then and there owned and controlled by them, and being driven, run and operated along said public highway and thoroughfare at said plaintiff aforesaid, and while traveling in an easterly direction on the north side of said public highway and thoroughfare, at a great and negligent rate of speed, to-wit: Approximately forty miles per hour, so that by reason of the negligent operation of said Moreland automobile truck, said truck did strike and hit the automobile in which said plaintiff was so riding. That by reason of said carelessness and negligence in the handling and operation of said Moreland automobile truck by defendants and each of them, as aforesaid, said Moreland automobile truck collided with and sideswiped said automobile in which said plaintiff was so riding."

Respondent seeks to support his pleading upon two grounds, namely, first, because it is alleged therein that the truck of appellants "was traveling in an easterly direction on the north side of the public highway"; and, second, that the truck was traveling "at a great and negligent rate of speed, to-wit, approximately forty miles per hour." In support of his first contention he relies upon section 124, California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517). In support of his second contention he relies upon sections 113 and 118 of the same act.

[1] It will be observed that the complaint does not allege the direction in which respondent's automobile was traveling at the time of the accident. It also fails to allege its position on the highway, and it does not attempt to describe the position of other vehicles, if any, upon the road at the time and place of the accident. The bare allegation that, at the time of the collision, appellants' truck was traveling on its left-hand side of the road, does not of itself charge negligence, for, under some circumstances, it is lawful to so drive a motor vehicle. Sections 122, 124, 125, California Vehicle Act, supra.

[2] Section 118 of the same act does not assist respondent. This section provides the speed at which trucks of given weights may be driven. It does not appear that the truck with its load was of a weight equal to or in excess of the minimum provided, and therefore, under the condition of the record, this section can have no application to this case.

[3] The only allegation of the complaint that can possibly support a cause of action is the one in which the pleader alleges that the truck was traveling "at a great and negligent rate of speed, to-wit, approximately forty miles per hour."

Section 113 of the California Vehicle Act, supra, in force at the time of this accident, provided, in part, as follows: "Restrictions as to speed. (a) Any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this state shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person. (b) Subject to the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section and except in those instances where a lower speed is specified in this act, it shall be lawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed not exceeding the following: * * * 7. Thirty-five miles an hour under all other conditions. (c) In all charges for a violation of this section, speeds in excess of those set forth in subdivision (b) of this section shall be taken as prima facie but not as conclusive evidence of a violation of this section, and every notice to appear and every complaint charging a violation of this section shall specify approximately the speed at which the defendant is alleged to have driven and exactly the lawful speed at the time and place of the alleged offense."

In the recent case of Benjamin v. Noonan, 277 P. 1045, 1046, the Supreme Court, in construing this section, used the following language: "Appellants complain of an instruction given by the court at its own instance which first stated the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517) to the effect that vehicles shall be driven on the public highways at a careful, prudent, reasonable, and proper speed, so as not to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person and that it shall be lawful to drive at a speed not exceeding 15 miles an hour in traversing an intersection of highways where the view is obstructed, etc., and then charged that a violation thereof constituted negligence as a matter of law. They contend for the distinction that an infraction of said provisions would constitute not negligence per se, but mere evidence of negligence which might or might not amount to proof of negligence. We find no error in said instruction. As said in Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 144, 140 P. 706, 710: 'While it is undoubtedly correct to say that the act of driving a vehicle over a street or public highway beyond the speed limit established by a municipal ordinance or a statute merely constitutes evidence of negligence in cases where damage has followed the infraction of such an ordinance or law, the rule in this state is, however, that it is conclusive evidence of negligence (citing cases). Therefore, the statement that such an act is "of itself negligence," or "negligence as a matter of law" or "negligence per se" (equivalent expressions) is, in this state, strictly correct.' See, also, Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 507, 508, 182 P. 37; Flynn v. Bledsoe Co., 92 Cal. App. 145, 267 P. 887; Towne v. Godeou, 70 Cal. App. 148, 232 P. 1010; Greeneich v. Knoll, 73 Cal. App. 1, 238 P. 163. We find nothing in the cases cited by appellants at variance with the rule above set forth."

Under the authority of this case we must hold that the complaint in alleging that appellants' truck was traveling at a speed of approximately 40 miles per hour, 5 miles per hour in excess of the maximum speed specified in the section of the California Vehicle Act in force at the time of the accident, alleged a prima facie violation of the act, and therefore charged appellants with negligence per se in the operation of their truck at the time and place of the collision involved in this action. The complaint, therefore, is sufficient to support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

(Civ. 6267.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 9, 1930.

1. Mines and minerals §58—Escrow Instructions to deliver oil leases on showing of title, "subject to" current taxes held unconditional acceptance of offer in lessee's instructions.

Escrow instructions given by plaintiff lessors that oil leases should be delivered to defendant lessee on showing of title to land in plaintiffs, "subject to" current taxes, held to constitute unconditional acceptance of offer in defendant lessee's instructions that escrow holder should pay money which it received from defendant if within 30 days escrow holder received lease free from incumbrances except current taxes, and free from any conditions, reservations, or restrictions which would prevent drilling of oil well on property; phrase "subject to" being read as "subject only to," and valid contract therefore arose from such instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Subject To.]

2. Escrows §8(1)—Escrow holder held lessee's agent to receive lease, with reasonable time to issue title guaranty, where lease was delivered to escrow holder within period prescribed by instructions.

Where defendant as proposed lessee gave escrow instructions that money was to be delivered to plaintiff lessors of oil land, if escrow holder should receive lease from plaintiffs within 30 days, and which lease escrow holder should record for defendant, and show in its guaranty of title, when it could write the same, that title was in lessors free from incumbrances except current taxes, held that escrow holder was to receive lease as defendant's agent, and had reasonable time to issue guaranty of title, and, lease having been delivered to escrow holder within 30 days, condition of contract was fulfilled, notwithstanding lease was not recorded nor guaranty of title issued within the 30 days.

3. Escrows §5—Escrow Instructions are construable as favorably to other party as uncertainties therein permit.

Escrow instructions are to be construed as favorably to party not preparing them as any uncertainties in them may permit.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action brought to recover from the defendant the sum of $4,500 agreed by defendant to be put in escrow to be delivered to plaintiffs for an oil lease upon property belonging to the latter. While stated in different ways, the appellant urges two reasons why the judgment should be reversed: First, that there was no written contract between the parties; and, second, assuming a sufficient contract, that there was a failure to perform by the respondents within the time provided.

[1] The points raised necessitate a brief statement of the facts. On April 16, 1925, the appellant gave to the California Title Insurance Company its instructions, the material portions of which are as follows:

"We hand you herewith our check for the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00) and we will hereafter hand you the sum of four thousand dollars ($4,000.00) which you are authorized to pay to the order of Isaiah H. Smith, Maude L. Patrick, Cora Hillerman and Alvira Daisley, jointly or to divide the same between them as they may agree upon, provided that within thirty (30) days from the date hereof, you receive for us an oil lease upon the property hereinafter described" (here follows certain terms of the lease not in dispute in this action) "which said oil lease you will record for us and show in your guarantee of title when you can write the same showing title in said lessors, free and clear of encumbrance except current year's taxes and showing said title to be free from any conditions, reservations or restrictions which would prevent the drilling of an oil well on said property.

"Upon recording said lease, you will deliver a duplicate copy thereof executed by the said lessors and the undersigned to the said lessors.

"Your guarantee of title shall be written with a maximum liability of \$1,000.00. The undersigned will pay one-half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of the cost of escrow charges, for recording lease, and the said lessors will pay the balance of your charges." (Here follows description of property.)

On April 20th the respondents each signed instructions as follows:

"In your escrow No. 284804

"I hand you herewith in duplicate oil lease in favor of Star Petroleum Company covering lots 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Tract 3244, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, as per map recorded in book 37 of maps at page 22, records of said county.

"Please deliver one of these leases to the lessee and one to Clement L. Shinn when you have written your guarantee of title with liability of $1,000 showing title to the land in said lease described vested in lessors subject to 1925-26 taxes.

"Receive for me," etc. (Here follows sum of money designated by each of the respondents aggregating $4,500.)

The argument of appellant to support its claim that no contract was entered into is in effect that the respondents did not unconditionally accept its offer as contained in the instructions which we have quoted. In particular it is said that the respondents called for a guarantee of title showing the property to be free from incumbrances except taxes for the current year, and free also from any conditions, reservations, or restrictions which would prevent the drilling of an oil well upon the property, while the instructions of the respondents provided for a guarantee showing title vested in them subject to taxes of 1925-26. Suppose the instructions of the respondents had contained the word "only" after the word "subject," making it read "subject only to 1925-26 taxes," could it then be argued that the respondents had not accepted the offer of the appellant? We think not. For in the assumed situation the respondents would have agreed to evidence a title in themselves, free from all and every kind of incumbrance except the taxes. That the language actually employed is, under all the circumstances, subject to the construction already suggested in the question, cannot be seriously doubted. And that the trial court deemed such construction to be proper is made manifest by a finding to the effect that the parties entered into a contract which called for the respondents to produce "a guarantee of title by the California Title Insurance Company at Los Angeles, California, covering the real property described in said lease, and showing title in the plaintiffs free and clear of encumbrances, except current year's taxes, and showing said title to be free of any conditions, reservations, or restrictions which would prevent the drilling of an oil well on said property, and subject only to exceptions set forth in said lease." Counsel for appellant asserts that Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal.

574, 229 P. 327, and Neher v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 683, 242 P. 713, are not in point upon the question whether the escrow instructions constitute a contract in the present instance, for the reason that in the two cases mentioned the parties were all present, whereas in the present case the respondents' instructions were not executed or delivered the same day as the appellant's. There is no merit in this contention. The respective writings of the parties in a single escrow contain all of the necessary constituent elements of a contract, and it is immaterial that the acceptance was not deposited therein at the identical time as the offer.

[2] A more serious question is presented by the second attack upon the judgment. Reverting for the moment to the language of appellant's instructions, we find this wording, "provided that within thirty (30) days from the date hereof you receive for us an oil lease upon the property hereinafter described." Counsel say that the words "receive for us" indicate that the escrow holder must have been able to close the escrow and record the lease within the 30-day period, otherwise it could not "receive for" appellant the lease. This argument proceeds upon the premise that, according to Shreeves v. Pearson, 194 Cal. 699, 230 P. 448, 451, the escrow holder is the agent of both parties prior to the performance of the terms of the escrow, and only becomes the agent of each upon its close. In other words, appellant asserts that the title company could not receive a lease for it until it had ceased to act for both parties and its dual agency had changed to an agency for each of the parties. While conceding the ingenious nature of the argument, we must deny it the persuasive force claimed for it by counsel. In the very case upon which he relies a typical example of a deed being deposited to be delivered to the grantee upon payment by the latter of a certain sum of money is discussed. The court says: "The escrow holder is, as to such deed and money, the agent of both parties until such time as the said satisfactory certificate of title is produced." The opinion does not say, and this is the important feature to be noted, that the escrow holder is the agent of the grantor as to the deed and of the grantee as to the money until the satisfactory title is produced but that it holds the deed and the money for both during the interim between opening and completion. It follows, therefore, that, when the lease was deposited in the escrow, the escrow holder represented the appellant for the purpose of asserting and protecting appellant's claim thereto in accordance with its instructions until the escrow should be closed, and, when closed, to deliver it over to the appellant (or record, as in the present case). We are accordingly bound to look further to the instructions of the appellant for the proper construction. We observe that, while it was perfectly convenient for appellant to have provided that the lease was to be recorded within the 30-day period if it so desired, it said: "Which said lease you will record for us and show in your guarantee of title when you can write the same showing," etc.

[3] It is apparent from an analysis of the entire document that the 30-day period had reference to the receipt in escrow of the lease, and the time for recordation was fixed upon the fulfillment by the title company of a condition, that of being able to write their guarantee of title—which, in the absence of a time certain, would necessarily have to be within a reasonable time after deposit of the lease. We are the more persuaded to this conclusion by the fact that the instructions given by the appellant were separate from those of the respondents. They were presumably prepared by it, and must therefore, in accordance with a well-settled rule of law, receive a construction as favorable to the respondents as any uncertainties in it may permit. It is not claimed that the escrow was not closed within a reasonable time, but only that the guarantee of title was not written within the period of 30 days.

Judgment affirmed.

DARRAH, District Attorney, v. SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY. (Civ. 3840.) *

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 6, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1930.

1. District and prosecuting attorneys $\S$ 5(4)—Reasonable compensation of district attorney for investigating qualifications of prospective jurors in important criminal cases is proper county charge (Pol. Code, $\S$ 4307).

Legitimate preliminary investigation of qualifications and fitness of prospective jurors in important pending criminal cases is proper exercise of district attorney's official duty, and reasonable compensation for such services is a proper county charge under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4307.

2. District and prosecuting attorneys $\S$ 5(3)—Expense of employing detectives to investigate qualifications of prospective jurors in criminal cases is proper county charge, recoverable by district attorney in his own name (Pol. Code, $\S$ 4237, 4307).

Employment of detectives or operatives by district attorney, when necessary for detection of crime or prosecution of criminal cases, as for investigating qualifications and fitness of prospective jurors, is authorized, and expense thus incurred is a proper county charge under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4307, and recoverable by district attorney in his own name under section 4237.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Guard C. Darrah, as District Attorney of the County of San Joaquin, against such county. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for appellant.

Tom H. Louttit, of Stockton, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against the defendant which was entered for failure to answer after a demurrer to the complaint had been overruled. The problem for solution is whether a district attorney may maintain an action in his own name for necessary expenses incurred and paid by him for the services of detectives employed in the course of the prosecution of criminal cases.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff as district attorney of San Joaquin county had expended from his private funds the sum of $454.95 as reasonable compensation for the services of several detectives, who are termed "operatives," employed by him to investigate and report to him the qualifications and desirability of accepting prospective jurymen who were summoned on a venire for the trial of criminal cases then pending in the county; that this service was necessary; that the claims of these agents had not been assigned to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff regularly presented to the board of supervisors his individual claim for payment of these expenses duly itemized and verified, which were disallowed. This suit was then commenced.

The defendant county of San Joaquin demurred to this complaint on the ground of uncertainty, misjoinder of parties plaintiff, and that it failed to state a valid cause of action. The demurrer was overruled. The defendant refused to answer, and judgment was thereupon entered against it, from which this appeal was perfected.

The appellant contends that: (1) The employing of detectives or agents to investigate and report the qualifications and desirability of accepting prospective jurors is not a necessary or proper expense incurred by the district attorney in the prosecution of criminal cases; (2) the district attorney is precluded by law from presenting for payment any claim except for his own personal service; (3) the claims of the detectives who performed the services were not assigned to the plaintiff, and the action is therefore not brought in the names of the real parties in interest; and (4) section 4237 of the Political Code, which is the County Government Act of San Joaquin County, is unconstitutional as class legislation in so far as it assumes to authorize the district attorney to personally present a claim for expenses incurred in the prosecution of criminal cases except such as are in compensation for or incident to his own personal services.

[1] Section 4307 of the Political Code, after allowing traveling and other personal expenses of the district attorney, provides in part: "The following are county charges: * * * All other expenses necessarily incurred by him [the district attorney] in the detection of crime and prosecution of criminal cases. * * *"

It is not unreasonable to hold that a legitimate preliminary investigation in behalf of the district attorney regarding the qualifications and fitness of prospective jurors who have been drawn on a venire for service in important pending criminal cases is a wise and proper exercise of his official duty, and might greatly tend to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Reasonable compensation for such services is therefore a proper county charge.

[2] The employment of detectives or operatives by district attorneys, when it becomes necessary for the detection of crime or the prosecution of criminal cases, is authorized. Langdon v. Koster, 157 Cal. 39, 106 P. 209. The expense thus incurred is a proper county charge and may be recovered by the district attorney in his own name. Langdon v. Koster, supra; Fulkerth v. Stanislaus County, 67 Cal. 334, 7 P. 754. The case of Langdon v. Koster, above cited, is conclusive of this appeal. That was a petition for a writ of mandate, which was issued, requiring the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco to draw a warrant in favor of the district attorney in payment of expenses incurred in employing a detective for the investigation of crime.

The judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC READY-CUT HOMES, Inc., v.
TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST CO.
(Civ. 7101.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 30, 1929.

1. Mortgages ⇨363—Plaintiff claiming to be highest bidder could not compel sale, where he did not allege trustee made public announcement that sale was without reserve (Civ. Code, § 1796).

Plaintiff claiming to be highest bidder at trustee's sale under deed of trust held not entitled to compel sale, where he did not allege that trustee made any public announcement that sale would be without reserve and that trustee had authority to make such announcement under Civ. Code, § 1796, relating to auction sales.

2. Mortgages ⇨361—Advertisement of trustee's sale to be at public auction to highest bidder was not equivalent to announcement sale was "without reserve" (Civ. Code, § 1796).

Advertisement of trustee's sale under trust deed to be at public auction to highest bidder for cash was not equivalent to announcement that sale was without reserve within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1796, relating to auction sales.

3. Mortgages ⇨363—Where debt was $101,324.98, and highest bid at trustee's sale was $13,000, trustee could continue sale even after receiving bids.

Where debt under trust deed amounted to $101,324.98, and highest bid at trustee's sale was $13,000, trustee was justified and had power to continue sale even after bids had been received.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Incorporated, against the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, to compel a sale to plaintiff upon his bid under a trustee's sale. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hyams & Himrod, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff declined to amend and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the defendant. From said judgment plaintiff appeals. The only question involved is whether or not the complaint states a cause of action. So far as material for the purpose of this decision, the complaint alleges: That the defendant is the trustee named in a deed of trust given by the owners and lessees of certain real property to secure the payment of promissory notes in the aggregate sum of $90,000. That the makers of said notes had defaulted in the payments due thereon, and the bona fide holder of said notes had demanded that the trustee sell the trust property to satisfy the debt, then amounting to the sum of $101,324.98. That the defendant, as such trustee, had taken all the preliminary steps necessary to sell the property and had given notice that it would sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in gold coin, "on the 26th day of February, 1927, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the western front entrance of the Court House in the City and County of Los Angeles, State of California, all the interest conveyed to it by said deed of trust." It is further alleged that at the time so fixed, the defendant continued said sale to the 9th day of March, 1927, at the same hour and place, and that in pursuance of said continuance the defendant, as trustee, offered for sale and sold the property described in said deed of trust to the highest bidder. That there were three bids made: The plaintiff herein bid $10,000, followed by a second bid of one L. A. Rose of $12,000, and the third bid by the plaintiff of $13,000. It is then alleged that the trustee thereupon called for other or additional bids, but there were no other bids, although full opportunity was given therefor. It further alleged that the sale was fairly conducted and that the plaintiff's bid of $13,000 was the highest and best bid, and plaintiff thereupon tendered said sum to the defendant and demanded that it execute to him a deed for the said property; but the defendant refused to accept the money or execute the deed, and that over the protests and objections of the plaintiff, then and there publicly announced the postponement of the sale to Monday, March 14, 1927, at the same hour and place. That the defendant has announced the intention of again offering the property for sale on the sole ground that the bid made by plaintiff was inadequate and for the purpose of obtaining a better price for said property. It is further alleged that the price offered by plaintiff was a fair and adequate price for the equity in said real property. The prayer was for equitable relief compelling a sale to plaintiff upon its bid.

[1, 2] Appellant urges that the sale having been advertised as a sale by public auction to the highest bidder, and having been offered for sale and bids received and the highest bid ascertained, it was therefore a sale without reserve, and plaintiff is entitled to a specific performance of its right to a conveyance of the property. In support of this point, counsel quotes from Warlow v. Harrison, 1 El. and El. 309, 28 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 18, 29 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 14, the following definition of an auction sale without reserve: "Neither vendor nor any person on his behalf may bid and that the property shall be sold to the highest bidder, whether the sum bid be equivalent to the real value or not." Counsel further cites sections 1792 to 1796 of the Civil Code of this state, both sections inclusive, which in their respective order defines a sale at public auction, as one made by public outcry to the highest bidder on the spot; that such a sale is completed when the auctioneer publicly announces it by the fall of his hammer, or in any other customary manner that the thing is sold; that until such announcement is made by the auctioneer the bidder may withdraw his bid; that when a sale by auction is made upon written or printed conditions, such conditions cannot be modified by any oral declaration of the auctioneer, except so far as they are for his own benefit; the last section above cited provides that: "If, at a sale by auction, the auctioneer, having authority to do so, publicly announces that the sale will be without reserve, or makes any announcement equivalent thereto, the highest bidder in good faith has an absolute right to the completion of the sale to him; and, upon such a sale, bids by the seller, or any agent for him, are void." Conceding for the purpose of a decision of this question that a trustee selling real property by virtue of the power vested in him by a trust deed is an auctioneer within the meaning of the law, we are of the opinion that the complaint is fatally defective because the pleader has not alleged that the trustee made any public announcement that the sale would be without reserve, or if there had been an allegation of such a character it is essential to the cause of action that there be a further allegation that the trustee had authority to announce that the sale would be without reserve. In England and Canada, although there seems to be some doubt on the subject, the rule seems to be, as stated by counsel for appellant, that where property is offered for sale at public auction and bids are received, in the absence of some declaration to the contrary, the sale is one without reserve and the highest bidder is entitled to a specific performance of a right to a conveyance of the property offered. Warlow v. Harrison, supra; McAlpine v. Young (Ont.) 2 C. H. Champ. Rep. 85. In a footnote to Tillman v. Dunman (Ga.) 57 L. R. A. 784, it is said that, "In the United States the rule is even less clearly defined than in England and Canada," and in the same footnote it is also stated that while other states have statutes regulating auctions, Dakota is the only one having a statute similar to section 1796 of our Civil Code. We are of the opinion that whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions, what constitutes a sale without reserve in California must be based upon a construction of said section. This Code provision says: "If, at a sale by auction, the auctioneer, having authority to do so, publicly announces that the sale will be without reserve, or makes any announcement equivalent thereto, the highest bidder in good faith has an absolute right to the completion of the sale. * * *" There is no allegation in the complaint that at the auction sale there was any announcement, public or otherwise, that the sale would be without reserve, nor was there any completion of the sale by the fall of the hammer or otherwise; nor do we believe that because the sale was advertised to be at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, it is the equivalent to an announcement that the sale was without reserve within the meaning of section 1796 of the Civil Code. In Anderson v. Wis. Central Ry. Co., 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 46, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379, it is held that an announcement or advertisement that certain property would be sold at auction to the highest bidder was a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids would be received. It is not an offer to sell which becomes binding, even conditionally, on the owner when the bid is made. On this subject the court says: "On principle and authority the correct rule is that an announcement that a person will sell his property at public auction to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received." We are satisfied from the foregoing that the sale was not a sale without reserve, and therefore appellant is not entitled to a specific performance of his alleged contract.

[3] The foregoing contention of the appellant has been decided upon the theory that a trustee selling property in accordance with the terms of a trust deed, is governed by the above-cited sections of the Civil Code relating to public sales made by auctioneers. It is claimed by respondent that such sections do not apply to sales by a trustee, and irrespective thereof, it is a duty of the trustee, in the fulfillment of his trusteeship, to adjourn a sale when in his opinion the best interests of the parties require it. In 41 Corpus Juris, p. 965, it is said: "The mortgagee exercising his power of sale, or the trustee proceeding to sell under the deed of trust, has power and authority to postpone the sale beyond the day fixed in the notice. * * * It is the duty of the mortgagee or trustee to postpone or adjourn the sale when the interest of the parties will be promoted thereby, but the exercise of his discretion in determining whether circumstances demanding a postponement or adjournment exist will ordinarily be binding." At page 969 of the same volume it is said: "The mortgagee or trustee must exercise good faith in protecting the rights of the mortgagor and others having an interest in the premises, using all reasonable efforts to make the sale beneficial to such parties by obtaining the full value of the property or the best price possible." In Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 1873, the rule of law applicable to the power of a trustee or mortgagee to sell by public auction is to the effect that in the exercise of a sound discretion a sale may be adjourned by him, in order to obtain a fair price for the property; without such power the property might be sacrificed to the detriment of both the creditor and debtor. In Beetem v. Garrison, 129 Md. 664, 99 A. 897, the action was to foreclose a mortgage containing a power of sale. The property described in the mortgage was offered for sale by public auction and the sale commenced. The highest bid at that time was $1,000. The attorney making the sale deemed the bid too small and withdrew the property from sale, and it was held he had authority to do so. In Meyer v. Jefferson Insurance Co., 5 Mo. App. 245, where a trustee sold real property of at least the value of $15,000 to the creditor for $3,000, the trustee, knowing that the creditor was intending to bid, if necessary as high as $15,000, but bid only $3,000 because there were no other bidders, it was held that the trustee had the power to adjourn the sale and abused his discretion in not doing so, and the sale was set aside. In the case at bar the complaint alleges that the debt amounted to the sum of $101,324.98, and the highest bid was $13,000. We think that under the facts alleged in the complaint and the authorities above cited, the trustee was justified and had the power to continue the sale even after bids had been received. Other cases tending to support this view are Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 P. 194; Lallance v. Fisher, 29 W. Va. 512, 2 S. E. 775, and Ainsa v. Mercantile Trust Co., 174 Cal. 504, 163 P. 898.

We are satisfied that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that the ruling of the court sustaining the demurrer thereto was correct, and the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

In re LINCOLN. (Civ. 5416.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 23, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1930.

1. Attorney and client ⇨57—Questions presented by appeal from judgment suspending attorney did not become moot because of expiration of period of suspension.

Questions presented by appeal from judgment suspending attorney from practice of law did not become moot on expiration of period of suspension before appeal was determined.

2. Attorney and client ⇨52—Accusation that attorney advised client to sign affidavit that money deposited in court had never been accepted, knowing otherwise, held to charge violation of duty (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 282, subd. 4, 287, subd. 2).

Accusation that attorney advised and permitted his client to sign affidavit to effect that money deposited in court in certain foreclosure action had not been accepted, knowing of oral decision of trial judge that foreclosure should be denied because of such deposit, held to charge violation of duty as an attorney at law, under Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subd. 4, which would justify disbarment under section 287, subd. 2.

3. Attorney and client ⇨46—Acquittal on charge of obtaining money by false pretenses did not deprive court of jurisdiction to try disbarment proceeding for unprofessional conduct.

That accused had been acquitted on charge of obtaining money on false pretenses did not deprive court of jurisdiction to try proceeding for disbarment of accused as attorney at law, on accusation charging that accused advised and permitted client to sign affidavit to effect that deposit in court had never been accepted, knowing of oral decision of trial judge that foreclosure should be denied because of such deposit.

4. Attorney and client ⇨53(2)—Attorney's testimony held sufficient confession of dereliction of duty to warrant entry of judgment suspending attorney.

In proceeding for disbarment of attorney on accusation that attorney had advised and permitted his client to sign affidavit to effect that deposit in court in foreclosure action had not been accepted, knowing oral decision of judge that foreclosure should be denied because of such deposit, testimony of attorney held sufficient confession of his dereliction of duty to warrant court, in conjunction with documentary evidence, to enter judgment suspending attorney from practice of law.

5. Attorney and client ⇨53(1)—Judge's testimony that he would not have permitted withdrawal of deposit, had attorney informed him of oral decision disposing of deposit, held not objectionable as opinion of witness.

In proceedings to disbar an attorney on accusation that he advised and permitted his client to sign affidavit to effect that deposit in court in foreclosure action had not been accepted, knowing of oral decision of trial judge that foreclosure should be denied because such deposit had been made, testimony of judge that he would not have permitted withdrawal of deposit, had he known of such oral decision, held not objectionable as being an opinion and conclusion of witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Walter Gould Lincoln was suspended from the practice of law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Gould Lincoln, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

Paul Vallee and Ovilla N. Normandin, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Association.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. [1] The appeal herein is from a judgment suspending the accused attorney from membership in the legal fraternity for the period of one year, commencing December 24, 1924. The first question with which we are confronted is: Have the questions presented by the appeal become moot by the expiration of the period of suspension? (There is no doubt but that the suspension period has expired on account of the self-executing character of the judgment. See In re Graves, 62 Cal. App. 168, 216 P. 386, and Lincoln v. Superior Court [Cal. App.] 271 P. 1107.)

The respondent Bar Association relies upon the authority of Goldsmith v. Board of Education, 63 Cal. App. 141, 218 P. 296, and two cases therein cited, to support their assertion that the questions raised by the appeal are now of only academic interest. The cited case was one wherein the plaintiff and appellant, Goldsmith, had been suspended as a school-teacher for unprofessional conduct, after a hearing by the board of education. He instituted a proceeding in mandamus by which he sought to be restored to his position.

Judgment in the superior court went in favor of the board of education, and the petitioner appealed. Before the appeal was determined, the period of suspension expired, and petitioner was reinstated. The court held, upon the motion for dismissal, that petitioner's right to a salary during the period of suspension was involved, in addition to the question of reinstatement, and therefore, the appeal should not be dismissed. The reasoning upon the other question of whether the court should entertain an appeal upon the question of reinstatement is obviously dicta. Aside from this fact is another element which distinguishes it from the present situation in this: That there the appeal was not from the order finding the petitioner guilty and suspending him, but an appeal in the mandate proceeding, which could only result in an order directing the board to reinstate. Weaver v. Reddy, 135 Cal. 430, 67 P. 683, is to be distinguished on the same ground. The third case, Bradley v. Voorsanger, 143 Cal. 214, 76 P. 1031, is very patently not in point. There the plaintiff brought action to enjoin the holding of an election. The trial court denied the injunction. Before the appeal could be heard the election had been held.

Manifestly this case is of no assistance to us, because it illustrates a very obvious instance of the question having become moot. No judgment which could have been entered could possibly have afforded the plaintiff appellant any relief. It cannot be gainsaid that courts should not attempt to determine mere academic questions, or render judgments which are ineffective. But is that the instant situation? Assuming that an attorney who has been found guilty of unethical conduct, and for that reason suspended, is not strictly comparable to a judgment debtor or one convicted of a criminal offense, our attention has not been directed to a case directly in point, nor have we been able to discover any. In civil matters, the law, at least in California, is settled. The party against whom a judgment is rendered does not lose his right of appeal by payment of the judgment, unless the payment is made, by way of compromise. Warner Bros. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 639, 63 P. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400. Nor can the judgment debtor be deprived of his right of appeal by execution of the judgment and its satisfaction. Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 22, 52 P. 40. We think it is apparent that in the instances covered by the authorities cited it could not be seriously argued that the questions had become moot. Yet these adjudications do point to a distinction made in some of the subsequent criminal cases involving fines, wherein it is said that, if the payment of the fine be voluntary, the right of appeal is lost, whereas, if its payment be considered involuntary, the right of appeal is not lost. And at this juncture it is well to note that in the present proceeding the satisfaction of the judgment was entirely without the acquiescence of the appellant.

There has been a considerable divergence of opinion in criminal cases. We were at first inclined to set most of them down for the purpose of comparing the logic upon which they are premised. But it seems sufficient, inasmuch as we have concluded that the proper rule is announced in the jurisdictions of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, New York, Washington, and Alabama, to call attention to some of the authorities there. In the well-reasoned case of State v. Wintrop, 148 Wash. 526, 269 P. 793, 796, 59 A. L. R. 1265, the court says:

"Notwithstanding these views of the courts touching the question of waiver of right of appeal by payment of a civil money judgment, there seems to be a very decided conflict in the decisions touching the appealable effect of satisfying a criminal or criminal contempt judgment by payment of a fine or suffering imprisonment thereby adjudged against the accused, even when such submission to the judgment is clearly the result of coercion. The reasoning of the courts which hold to the view that such satisfying of a criminal or criminal contempt judgment constitutes a waiver of the right of appeal seems for the most part to be rested upon the theory that nothing can be restored to the accused if the judgment against him be reversed, and that therefore the question of the correction of the judgment of conviction * * * becomes merely moot. Those decisions, it seems to us, lose sight of or purposely ignore that damaging effect of such a judgment which everybody knows reaches far beyond its satisfaction by payment of a fine or serving a term of imprisonment. The Alabama court, in Johnson v. State, 172 Ala. 424, 55 So. 226, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 296, learnedly reviewed the question of waiver of appeal by Johnson by his payment of a fine adjudged against him for selling intoxicating liquor. Justice Somerville, speaking for the court, holding that such satisfaction of the judgment did not constitute a waiver by Johnson of his right of appeal, very pertinently observed:

"Although there are a few cases to the contrary, the rule is nearly universal in civil cases that mere payment of a judgment, or obedience to the mandate of the court, works no waiver of the right of appeal. * * * We can discover no valid reason for a different result in criminal cases. The assumption in State v. Westfall, 37 Iowa, 575, and other cases, that a convicted defendant, who is ordered to be committed to jail, unless the fine and costs be paid or secured, and, under that threat from a valid judgment, pays the penalty assessed, does so voluntarily, is but a grim form of jesting, and, utterly at war with the generally accepted notion of the meaning of that term. * * * Nor do we conceive that the supposed inability of the defendant to recover, after reversal of the judgment, the sum paid by him for its satisfaction, as is predicated in some of the cases under criticism, is a matter of vital importance. Whether or not the defendant in this case might, by order or restitution, or by any other legal remedy, recover the money he has paid is a question which is not before us, and which we need not now consider. The right to appeal and reverse an erroneous judgment in a criminal case cannot, we are satisfied, be grounded solely on that consideration, and we concur in the opinion of Cowen, J., in Barthelemy v. People, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 248, 255, where he says, in discussing this very question, in relation to a conviction for criminal libel: "But the payment or satisfaction of an erroneous judgment against a party can never be allowed as a bar to a writ of error, even in a case where we must see that no restitution could follow the reversal as a legal consequence, and no costs be recovered. An erroneous judgment against him is an injury per se, from which the law will intend he is or will be damaged by its continuing against him unreversed. * * * A judgment on the merits is conclusive between the parties, and, if not by direct, it may be followed by remote, consequences actually injurious." And this view has been quoted and approved by the Supreme Court of Illinois. Page v. People, 99 Ill. 418, 425. The motion to dismiss the appeal must therefore be overruled."

"In Roby v. State, 96 Wis. 667, 71 N. W. 1046, holding to this same view of the law, Justice Winslow, speaking for the court, said: 'It appears by the record that the plaintiff in error was sentenced to one year's imprisonment in May, 1896, and consequently that his term must now have expired. This fact, however, makes no difference with the disposition of the case. A person convicted of crime may prosecute his writ of error while serving his sentence, and the fact that he may serve out his entire sentence before the decision of his case does not affect his right to a reversal of the judgment if it be erroneous. The mere payment of a judgment in a civil cause does not operate to bar or waive the right to appeal therefrom (Sloane v. Anderson, 57 Wis. 123, 18 N. W. 684, 15 N. W. 21), and for stronger reasons the compulsory working out of a judgment in a criminal case does not debar a man from obtaining a reversal of an erroneous conviction, and thus removing the stigma which wrongly rests on his name and reputation.'"

To the quotation we deem it proper to add the following from People v. Marks, 64 Misc. Rep. 679, 120 N. Y. S. 1106, 1109: "But I do not agree with the learned counsel that the question is purely academic. I am of opinion that, if the defendant had been unjustly compelled to pay a fine, his money should be returned to him. Of far more importance, however, is the defendant's right to be relieved of the odium and disgrace of a conviction. To a citizen of good reputation, this is of more serious consequence, and the pecuniary damage he has sustained is of trifling import." And also we quote from Commonwealth v. Fleckner, 167 Mass. 13, 44 N. E. 1053, as follows: "We should be slow to suppose that the legislature meant to take away the right to undo the disgrace and legal discredit of a conviction (Pub. St. c. 169, § 19) merely because a wrongly convicted person has paid his fine or served his term. The fact that no indemnity is provided by this act is far from enough to lead us to that conclusion. Of course, the payment of the fine in accordance with the sentence was not a consent to the sentence, but a payment under duress." A notation of the principal authorities to the contrary will be found in State v. Winthrop, supra.

If it be true that one who has been found guilty of a criminal offense and has satisfied the judgment by payment of the fine or suffering a term of imprisonment may yet be entitled to be relieved of the odium and disgrace of the wrongful conviction, it must be equally, if not more, just to remove from the name of a member of the ancient and honorable profession of the law the stain of a judgment which brands him as unfaithful to the trust reposed in him. There is no asset to be possessed by the lawyer so dear or so valuable as his known character, or reputation for honesty, integrity, and sincerity of purpose. When it is wrongfully assailed, he is damaged, not only in the finer sensibilities, but also in a financial measure impossible to accurately estimate. We hold to the opinion that the appellant should not be foreclosed of his right to remove this blot upon his record, if in fact he was wrongfully convicted, by the situation forced upon litigants by the congested condition of the calendar, thus rendering it impossible to determine the appeal until after the period of suspension had expired.

[2] We therefore pass to a consideration of the merits of the appeal. The first point urged by the appellant is that the accusation does not state a ground for disbarment. The accusation in effect charges that the appellant was counsel for Estelle R. Spaulding, for whom he filed an action on September 20, 1922, wherein it was sought to rescind a contract between Estelle R. Spaulding and C. N. Legge, and to cancel a chattel mortgage given by appellant's client to C. N. Legge; that on October 4, 1922, Estelle Spaulding deposited in court the sum of $75, being the amount of the monthly installment due and payable on that date according to the terms of the mortgage; that thereafter similar deposits were made monthly until a total sum of $1,500 had been paid in; that of said amount $1,000 was by stipulation of both parties paid to the owners of the property as rental; that on October 13, 1922, C. N. Legge commenced an action against Spaulding for the foreclosure of the chattel mortgage; that both actions went to trial on May 16, 1923; that two days later the trial judge, Hon. L. H. Valentine, orally announced his decision to the effect that, although the defendant in the rescission action had made certain false and fraudulent representations, yet the plaintiff had waived and lost her right of rescission, and that in the foreclosure action the deposits in court of the monthly sums of $75 having been made for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, and as payment of all sums falling due according to the terms of the mortgage, the defendant Estelle R. Spaulding was not in default and plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment, but that the sums so on deposit belonged to him. The accusation then sets forth that, although the accused was present when judgment was so announced on May 18, 1923, yet he caused and permitted his client to swear to an affidavit that she had deposited the sum of $500 as a tender in court, and that the tender had not been accepted, and she desired a return of the tender; that, although accused well knew that the tender had in fact been accepted, he presented the affidavit to another judge of the superior court, Hon. Sidney N. Reeve, with the statement that no judgment had been rendered in the action, and that the tender had been rejected, and without disclosing the announcement of Judge Valentine to Judge Reeve, and secured and induced, by his statements and failure to disclose vital facts, Judge Reeve to make an order directing the clerk to turn over to his client the sum then on deposit. The accusation also alleges that Estelle Spaulding did succeed in withdrawing the sum of $481; that accused never advised C. N. Legge, or his counsel, or Judge Valentine, of the withdrawal of said sum, but permitted findings and judgment to be entered in accordance with the oral announcement; that Judge Reeve relied upon the statements of accused and the affidavit when making the order mentioned, and would not have made the order, had he been advised of the announced decision of the trial judge.

Section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in subdivision 2 thereof that an attorney may be removed or suspended for "any violation of the oath taken by him, or of his duties as such attorney and counselor." Section 282 of the same Code, in defining the duties of an attorney, by subdivision 4 makes it mandatory for the lawyer "to employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to him, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never seek to mislead the judge or any judicial officer by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." In the case of People v. Pearson, 55 Cal. 472, the Supreme Court made quick disposition of a cause involving somewhat similar action. In that case the attorney advised his client to verify a complaint containing allegations which he knew to be untrue, and which he led her to believe had been corrected before she signed it. The court said in its opinion that it was unnecessary "to comment upon the conduct here disclosed." An analysis of the facts

In the present case brings us to a similar conclusion. When the appellant advised and permitted his client to sign an affidavit to the effect that the tender had never been accepted, knowing that the oral decision of the trial judge that foreclosure should be denied, because the payments had been made in court for the benefit of plaintiff in the second action, he put himself in a position comparable to the attorney in the case cited. When he withheld from Judge Reeve the information that the trial judge had acted upon the theory that the deposits made were for the benefit of the plaintiff in the foreclosure action, he was guilty of trickery and misleading a judge by artifice. It makes no difference whether the judicial officer was misled by a false statement, an unrighteous silence, or a combination of both. The fact remains that he was betrayed into taking action he would not have taken, had he not relied upon the professional character of the attorney. The accusation in our opinion sets forth a flagrant violation of appellant's duty as an attorney at law and his oath of office as such.

[3] The next assertion of the appellant is that the court had no jurisdiction to try the cause, "since the accused had previously been acquitted before this same court upon a felony charge based upon the same facts." He relies upon Ex parte Tyler, 107 Cal. 78, 40 P. 33, People ex rel. Deneen v. John, 212 Ill. 615, 72 N. E. 789, People v. Comstock, 176 Ill. 192, 52 N. E. 67, In re Z, 89 Mo. App. 426, State v. Gebhardt, 87 Mo. App. 542, and Jones v. Sanderson, 287 Mo. 176, 229 S. W. 1087, as supporting his contention. To make the situation clear, we note that the record discloses that appellant was charged by information with obtaining money by false pretenses, which information alleged the facts set forth in the accusation. The defendant was acquitted by the verdict of the jury. Here the appellant is accused of unprofessional conduct. Assuming that the facts did not constitute the offense of obtaining money by false pretenses, it does not follow that he was not guilty of unethical acts. Had the accusation charged a violation of the laws of the state in a matter distinct from the attorney's professional conduct, committed in his private capacity and not by virtue of his office as an attorney, then the authorities upon which appellant relies would necessarily be conceded great persuasive force. And some of them have a bearing upon the impropriety of proceeding to try the disbarment charge before the criminal complaint, but otherwise they apparently have no application.

[4] There are a number of assignments of error relating to the reception or rejection of testimony and the refusal of the court to dismiss the proceeding. It is unnecessary to comment upon any of them herein, other than one, for the reason that the accused attorney took the stand after all of the pleadings, including the affidavit of Mrs. Spaulding, had been introduced, and gave his own version of his preparation of the affidavit and the interview with Judge Reeve in these words: "I dictated the affidavit to my stenographer; she wrote it, and the next day, Saturday, I took it to the presiding judge, Judge Reeve. There were, no doubt, a number of attorneys waiting; there was no unusual hurry, any more than there is upon any other day of the week, at the presiding judge's bench, but there were other lawyers waiting. I presented the affidavit to Judge Reeve, and I said: 'This case has been tried; the judgment has not yet been rendered. This money was deposited in court some time ago, and has not yet been accepted, and my client wants to withdraw it.' Judge Reeve asked me absolutely nothing further about the case in way, shape, nor form." Here in the words of the appellant is a sufficient confession of his dereliction of duty to warrant the court, in conjunction with the documentary evidence, to enter the judgment complained of. From his own mouth comes the statement that he failed to communicate to the court the true facts concerning the litigation. In view of this testimony and the unprejudicial nature of the assignments, we are not disposed to unduly lengthen an opinion already extended.

[5] We cannot summarily dismiss appellant's contention that it was error to permit Judge Reeve to testify "that, had said facts been disclosed to said Hon. Sidney N. Reeve by said Walter Gould Lincoln at that time, said Hon. Sidney N. Reeve would have refused to sign the order permitting the withdrawal of said funds and the payment thereof to Estelle R. Spaulding." The testimony thus introduced was, on account of the then illness of Judge Reeve, in affidavit form, with the stipulation of all parties that he would testify in accordance with the averments thereof if he were present in court; the defendant reserving the right to object to the portion just quoted, on the ground that it was the opinion and conclusion of the witness.

The objection is not well founded. It is always permissible under a well-known rule of evidence to ask a witness, who claims to have been defrauded by the false representations of another, whether he relied upon the statements and representations of the latter. The testimony given here was of the same import. Furthermore, the trial judge was justified in drawing a like inference from the facts of the case, upon the theory that a judge of one department would not knowingly render the judge who tried the case impotent to carry out his announced decision.

Judgment affirmed.

FRANKISH v. FRANKISH CO. et al.
(Civ. 45.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 7, 1930.

1. Quieting title ⇨44(1)—Burden was on plaintiff suing to quiet title to show title in herself.

In action to quiet title, burden was on plaintiff to show title in herself.

2. Quieting title ⇨10(1)—Right to recover of plaintiff suing to quiet title depends on strength of her own title, not on weakness of defendant's title.

In action to quiet title, right of plaintiff to recover depends on strength of her own title, and not on weakness of title relied on by defendant.

3. Deeds ⇨56(3)—In effective delivery of deed, there must be actual or constructive change of possession of instrument with intent by grantor to transfer title to grantee (Civ. Code, § 1054).

To constitute effective delivery of deed required by Civ. Code, § 1054, to make grant take effect, there must be an actual or constructive change of possession of the instrument, with intention on part of grantor to transfer title from himself to grantee.

4. Deeds ⇨208(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that there was no delivery of deed as required to cause title to pass (Civ. Code, § 1054).

In action to quiet title brought by one of two grantees against grantor, evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that there was no delivery of deed from corporate grantor to grantees, or either of them, as required by Civ. Code, § 1054.

5. Evidence ⇨207(2)—Grantor's counsel's opening statement held not construable as admission that deed was delivered so as to pass title (Civ. Code, § 1054).

In action by grantee against grantor to quiet title, grantor's counsel's opening statement admitting that deed was executed, but asserting that deed was thereafter placed in corporate grantor's safe, and never delivered, and was not intended to be delivered until certain prerequisites were consummated, and that such prerequisites were never consummated, and that there was no delivery of deed, held not construable into admission that deed was delivered to grantees, as required by Civ. Code, § 1054.

6. Deeds ⇨200—Proof that grantor received no consideration for deed held admissible to support grantor's defenses of nonexecution and nondelivery of deed, notwithstanding recital therein of valuable consideration.

In grantee's action against corporate grantor to quiet title, in which grantor set up defenses that deed was neither executed nor authorized by defendant, and was signed without authority by former officer whose term had expired prior to signing of deed, that deed was never delivered to grantees, as required by Civ. Code, § 1054, and was made without consideration, held that defendant was entitled to prove that it received no consideration for deed under said defenses, notwithstanding deed itself recited a valuable consideration.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1009(4)—Weight of evidence in quiet title action held for trial court to determine.

Weight of evidence in action to quiet title was for trial court to consider and pass on.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Trial court's finding supported by any competent evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where there is any competent evidence to support trial court's finding, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1170(7)—Trial court's erroneous rulings on admission or rejection of evidence held not prejudicial to plaintiff who failed to prove her case (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Trial court's erroneous rulings on admission or rejection of evidence were not prejudicial to plaintiff suing to quiet title, where there was a fatal failure to prove her case by plaintiff, and, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, such errors therefore did not furnish grounds for reversal.

10. Pleading ⇨236(1)—Application to amend pleading is addressed to trial judge's sound discretion.

An application to amend a pleading is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, who has considerable latitude in the exercise of such discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by Sari B. Frankish against the Frankish Company and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

W. E. Byrne, of San Bernardino, Isaac Jones, of Ontario, and Harry A. Reese, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

MARKS, J. Appellant brought this action to quiet title to a house and six lots in the city of Ontario, county of San Bernardino, state of California. She claimed to deraign her title through a deed dated August 12, 1924, and alleged to have been executed by the Frankish Company, a corporation, one of the respondents to appellant, and Charles Frankish, the other respondent. She alleged that Charles Frankish refused to join with her as plaintiff in the action, and was therefore made a defendant.

The respondent the Frankish Company, which for brevity will be referred to as the corporation, denied title in appellant and Charles Frankish, and asserted title in itself. It alleged that the deed was neither executed nor authorized by the corporation, and was signed without any authority by its president and a former secretary whose term of office had expired prior to his signing the deed; that it was never delivered to the grantees; that it was made without any consideration; and other special defenses that it will not be necessary to notice at this time.

Charles Frankish filed a disclaimer. The court found against appellant and in favor of the corporation on the question of the ownership of the property, as well as on its special defenses, and entered judgment accordingly.

Appellant complains of the findings of the court on the grounds that they are not supported by the evidence, and are contrary to the evidence, and also of many errors in the rulings of the court on the admission and rejection of evidence during the trial.

We will first consider the evidence in support of the finding that the deed under which appellant claims her title was never delivered by the corporation, for, if this finding is supported by the evidence, appellant's action must fail, and the judgment must be affirmed, unless there were errors occurring during the trial that were prejudicial to her substantial rights.

The corporation was organized and existed as a corporation for profit. It acted as a holding company with the title vested in it of property formerly owned by Charles Frankish, who, with his sons, daughter, and son-in-law, were its sole stockholders, and from among whom its board of directors and officers were selected. It was organized in August, 1912. Charles Frankish had been its president from its organization to a date some little time prior to the trial of this action. Hugh Frankish, one of the sons, was secretary of the corporation prior to and on the morning of August 12, 1924. On this morning a new board of directors was elected by the stockholders, and Emil F. Stroth, a son-in-law, was elected secretary. The corporation had its principal office in the city of Ontario. In this office was a large safe in which it kept its books, records, and important papers. It contained a separate compartment in which Charles Frankish kept his personal securities and papers.

About 6 months prior to August 12, 1924, Charles Frankish, who was a widower of the age of about 78 years, met appellant, who was then Mrs. Sari Buffington, a widow of the age of about 43 years. The acquaintance ripened into courtship, and they were first married on August 13, 1924. Seemingly there was some defect in their first ceremony, for they separated in the fall of 1924, and Charles Frankish brought suit for annulment of the marriage. This action was subsequently dismissed, and the two were again married on January 13, 1925, and resumed cohabitation. They lived together for some little time, and then separated, which separation was permanent. This action was commenced by appellant on March 25, 1926.

Some time in June or July, 1924, the stockholders of the corporation commenced discussing the division of its assets among themselves and the winding up of its affairs. The approaching marriage of Charles Frankish was probably a contributing cause to these discussions. He expressed a desire to receive the Ontario property which is the subject of this litigation, as a part of his share in case the division of assets was finally consummated. It had been his home for many years. On August 10, 1924, the discussions reached the point of tentatively estimating the value of the various properties of the corporation, these totaling a sum slightly in excess of $169,000. The proposed division of the assets of the corporation was thereafter abandoned.

The capital stock of the corporation was divided into 750 shares of the par value of $100 each. On August 12, 1924, the ownership of the stock appeared on the books of the corporation as follows: Charles Frankish, trustee, 250 shares; L. J. Frankish, a son, 115 shares; L. J. Frankish, trustee, 10 shares; R. Evelyn Stroth, a daughter, 125 shares; Emil F. Stroth, trustee, a son-in-law, 125 shares; H. Frankish, trustee, a son, 125 shares. On the afternoon of August 12, 1924, after the election and qualification of the new board of directors and the election of Emil F. Stroth as its secretary in the place of Hugh Frankish, who appears as H. Frankish in the list of stockholders, Charles Frankish asked his son Hugh to prepare a deed to the Ontario property from the corporation to Charles Frankish and Sari B. Frankish. This Hugh did, and the deed was then signed by Charles Frankish as president of the corporation and Hugh Frankish as secretary, and the corporate seal attached. Hugh then took the deed to a notary public, who attached an acknowledgment. The only authority given the officers to dispose of corporate property was found in a resolution passed on September 3, 1912, by which the president and secretary were authorized to "sell and convey any of the lands of said company at such price or prices and on such terms as they may deem for the best interests of the company." No other authority was given by the board of directors to execute the deed in question.

Up to this point there is no conflict in the testimony before us. In the balance of the evidence there is not so much a conflict in the evidence as there is a conflict on the construction put upon it and the conclusions to be drawn from it by the parties.

In support of the court's finding that the deed was never delivered to either Charles Frankish or Sari B. Frankish, we have the testimony of two witnesses. Hugh Frankish testified that he signed the deed as secretary of the corporation because his father requested him to do so, and, as he was in the habit of signing conveyances, he did not take into consideration the fact that he was no longer secretary. The reason given for drawing and signing the deed was that, as Charles Frankish was going to be married the next day, and was going away on a wedding trip, he desired to have the deed signed and acknowledged to show that he would receive the property if the assets were finally divided among the stockholders. There was no intention of having the deed delivered nor of vesting title in the grantees unless and until the stockholders should consummate the division of the corporation assets. In case this was finally accomplished, and before delivery, it would be necessary to finally determine and agree upon the value to be placed upon this and each other property of the corporation, which value would be charged against the interest of the stockholder receiving such parcel of corporate property. After the acknowledgment was attached to the deed on August 12, 1924, Hugh returned it to the corporation safe, where he placed it in a compartment containing the corporation papers and not in the compartment used exclusively by his father, after which time he did not again see the deed. The only time that Charles Frankish had physical possession of the instrument, to the knowledge of this witness, was when he attached his signature thereto as president of the corporation.

Charles Frankish corroborated the testimony of Hugh in all particulars. He took up the narrative of the disposition of the deed after it had been placed with the corporation papers in the safe by his son. He testified that, without the knowledge or consent of any other stockholder, officer, or director of the corporation in the late afternoon of August 12th, he took it from among the corporation papers in the safe, "borrowed it," as he described his act, and carried it to the home of Sidney C. Ford, where he met appellant and showed it to her. In reply to questions as to what he said when he showed the deed to her, he replied, "I said the company had agreed to deed the property to me. I could not say the exact words. My recollection is I told her the company had agreed to deed the property to me." On the same evening he returned the deed to the safe and placed it among the papers of the corporation and not in his private compartment. When the witness discovered, in September or October, 1924, that his marriage ceremony was defective, he told one of his sons to destroy the deed, which was not done. Later, appellant and Charles Frankish appeared to have effected a reconciliation, and his action to have the marriage annulled was dismissed. He then took the deed from among the company papers, where it had reposed up to that time, and placed it in his own private compartment, without the knowledge of any other stockholder, director, or officer of the corporation. Some time later, probably in December, 1924, it was removed from the private compartment of Charles Frankish by some one, which, according to the evidence, was the last time its existence appeared. It was not recorded and was not produced at the trial, and there is a strong inference that it was destroyed.

To meet this evidence, appellant produced two witnesses besides herself. As to the purported delivery of the deed she testified that on the afternoon of August 12, 1924, she met Charles Frankish on the lawn of the Ford home, when the following occurred: "He said to me—he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out this deed and said, 'the children have signed over the old home place to you and I as a wedding gift.' He opened it and handed it to me opened, and I took it. * * * I said that was so sweet and kind of the children, and to thank them for me, and I folded it up and handed it back to him and told him to put it in a safe, that I had no place to leave it, as we were leaving in the morning, and he said he would." Sidney C. Ford and Maude L. Ford both were present at this conversation, and described it in practically the same language used by appellant.

Upon their return to Ontario, after the marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Frankish occupied the property involved herein, as their home without paying any rent, for about a year, except for the period that Mr. Frankish was absent during the fall of 1924, when only Mrs. Frankish lived there. They moved to another location in Ontario, which was referred to as the "Almsley Square" home. Title to this property finally found its way into the name of appellant.

Under the date of February 13, 1925, Charles Frankish caused to be served on his children and his son-in-law a written demand for the return of the deed to the Ontario property and other instruments and personal property, stating that the same had been forcibly and illegally abstracted from his possession without his knowledge or consent. This demand was followed in March, 1925, by a suit in the superior court of San Bernardino county, to recover possession of the same personal property to which he asserted ownership. This case was dismissed before trial.

[1, 2] We have detailed the evidence in this case upon the question of the delivery of the deed because it is decisive and controlling on this appeal. In this action to quiet title the burden was on the plaintiff to show title in herself, and her right to recover necessarily depended on the strength of her own title, and not on the weakness of the one relied upon by the defendant. Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712. "A grant takes effect, so as to vest the interest intended to be transferred, only upon its delivery by the grantor." Section 1054, Civ. Code. "There is no better established legal principle than that the transfer of the ownership of real estate, so far as the transfer is to be made by deed, necessitates a delivery of that deed to effectuate the passing of title from the grantor to the grantee. Delivery is the force that vitalizes the instrument without which, though signed and acknowledged, it is invalid, and not effective for any purpose. If delivery is wanting, the deed is void ab initio, and is no better than a blank form. Consequently it is recognized that prior to its actual delivery, the grantor named in the instrument may change the character of the delivery originally contemplated, and has the right to destroy and nullify the instrument itself." 9 Cal. Jur. 149, and cases cited.

[3,4] In an effective delivery of a deed there must be an actual or constructive change of possession of the instrument, coupled with an intention on the part of the grantor to transfer the title from himself to the grantee. "It is essential to the validity of a transfer of real property that there be a delivery of the conveyance with intent to transfer the title, and the true test under which delivery is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with the possession of the conveyance the grantor intended thereby to divest himself of title. If he did, there was an effective delivery of the deed. If not, there was no delivery. The solution of this question is grounded entirely on the intention of the grantor, and this essential matter of intention is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from a consideration of all the evidence in a given case bearing upon the question." Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, 3, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 193 Cal. 368, 224 P. 455, 56 A. L. R. 734. We have no trouble in reaching the conclusion in this case that the evidence amply supports the finding of the trial court that there was no delivery of the deed from the corporation to Charles Frankish and Sari B. Frankish or either of them. Proof of an intent on the part of the grantor to divest itself of title is lacking.

[5] Appellant contends that, because of certain admissions in the opening statement of counsel for respondent, it cannot deny the delivery of the deed, and quotes from such statement the following: "It is true the deed was executed. The deed was signed by the company officials on the 12th day of August." Reading further in the same statement we find the following: "It was placed in the company safe and was never delivered to Mr. Frankish and was not to be delivered to him until such time as the arrangement of a settlement of the estate of the company was consummated; that that was never consummated, and our claim is that no delivery was ever made. * * * Our claim is there never was any delivery of the deed." We do not believe that this can be construed into an admission that the deed was delivered to the grantees or either of them. The case was not tried upon any such theory.

[6] Appellant complains of the rulings of the trial court in overruling her objections to questions, the answers to which elicited the information that no consideration had been paid by either Charles Frankish or appellant for the Ontario property, when the deed itself recited a valuable consideration. She invokes the rule that "evidence of this character cannot be allowed, in the case of a deed, 'when thereby the legal operation of the instrument to pass the entire interest according to the purpose therein designated would be defeated.'" Winchester v. Winchester, 175 Cal. 391, 165 P. 965, 966. It is not necessary for us to pass upon the applicability of this rule to the case before us as the evidence was admissible under another theory. If the corporation had received and retained an actual valuable consideration for the Ontario property, it might not have been in a position to assert some of the defenses relied upon by it. It was therefore at least entitled to prove it received no consideration for the deed under these defenses.

[7,8] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in sustaining objections to her offer in evidence of several letters exchanged between Charles Frankish and his children and son-in-law. The greater number of these letters are not in the record. Without the letters or a statement of their contents before us we cannot determine that the rulings of the trial court were erroneous. It is incumbent upon appellant to show prejudicial error in the rulings of the trial court on the admission or rejection of evidence, and a judgment will not be reversed unless such prejudicial error appears. Article 6, § 4½, Const. The letters before us serve only to impeach the testimony of witnesses for the corporation on the question of the delivery of the deed to the Ontario property, and would go to the weight of the evidence before the trial court. This error, if error it be, was not prejudicial to appellant, as the weight of the evidence is something to be considered and passed upon by the trial judge. Where there is any competent evidence to support a finding, it will not be disturbed on appeal. There was such evidence in this case.

[9] Some of the other rulings of the trial court upon objections to the admission of evidence, and motions to strike testimony, were undoubtedly erroneous, but none of them affects the failure of appellant to prove her title to the Ontario property, in that the deed to her was not delivered. This failure in her evidence is fatal to her case, and for this reason the errors of the trial court in its rulings upon the admission or rejection of evidence were not prejudicial to her, and do not furnish sufficient grounds for a reversal of the judgment.

[10] At the close of the trial, over the objection of appellant, the corporation was permitted to file an amendment to its answer to make its pleadings conform to the proof. While the amendment restated in greater particularity some of the defenses set forth in the original answer, it, in reality, pleaded but one new defense, namely, that the execution of the deed was beyond the powers of the corporation and ultra vires. An application to amend the pleadings is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and considerable latitude is given him in the exercise of such discretion. The judgment of the trial court is supported by the failure of appellant to establish her title, and this court does not need to go beyond this one question to affirm it. Therefore the filing of the amendment becomes unimportant, as it is not necessary for us to consider its allegations in reaching the conclusions that the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

FRIGIDAIRE CORPORATION et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 7093.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Master and servant ~~§~~372—That injuries to employee were not of kind to be anticipated does not defeat claim to compensation (Workmen's Compensation Act).

That injuries to employee were not of kind to be anticipated nor peculiar to employment in which he is engaged does not defeat claim to compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

2. Master and servant ~~§~~373—Where zone manager in charge of installing refrigerator plants was shot by wild bullet from policeman's pistol while waiting for train, injury "arose out of employment" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Where zone manager in charge of installation of refrigerator plants, with his headquarters in San Francisco, after finishing his labors in Reno, Nev., proceeded to railroad station, intending to board San Francisco train, and, as he stood on edge of platform adjacent to street identifying his hand luggage, he was struck by wild bullet from policeman's pistol and died, injury arose out of his employment so as to be compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), since such danger could be classified as street risk or travel hazard.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Arising Out of Employment.]

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Law by Catherine Melke and another, claimants for the death of Elmer Melke, employee, opposed by the Frigidaire Corporation, employer, and the Royal Indemnity Company, insurance carrier. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation, and the employer and the insurance carrier bring certiorari. Affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco, for respondent Catherine Melke.

KNIGHT, J. While standing on the open platform of the railroad station at Reno, Nev., awaiting the arrival of a train which he was about to board for San Francisco, Elmer Melke was struck and mortally wounded by a stray bullet fired by a police officer at a suspected criminal whom the officer was pursuing along the public street adjacent to the railroad station; and on account of Melke's death his widow and son were awarded compensation by the Industrial Accident Commission. Thereafter his employer, Frigidaire Corporation, and its insurance carrier, Royal Indemnity Company, instituted this proceeding in certiorari to have the award annulled upon the ground that the injury which resulted in Melke's death did not arise out of his employment.

The deceased was employed by said corporation as zone manager for Northern California and Nevada, his duties consisting in planning, supervising, and inspecting the installation of refrigerator plants within his district. His headquarters were in San Francisco, and he lived in Berkeley. Having finished his labors in Reno, he proceeded to the railroad station intending to board the San Francisco train leaving there at 9 o'clock in the evening; and as he stood on the edge of the station platform adjacent to the street identifying his hand luggage, which had just been deposited there by the hotel bus driver, he was struck by the wild bullet from the policeman's pistol, and died soon afterwards.

[1, 2] The commission's determination that Melke's injury happened in the course of his employment is not questioned; and, in view of the fact that he was required to travel about from place to place and to be in and around public places and upon the public streets, petitioners make no claim that any injuries he might have received as a result of exposure to the ordinary perils of the street and of such public places would not have been compensable; but they contend that the danger of being shot by a police officer in the pursuit of a fleeing criminal cannot be classified as a street risk or a travel hazard; and that, since Melke's injury was received from such source, the same is not compensable under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

We are of the opinion that the present situation is analagous to the one considered in the case of Katz v. Kadans & Co., 232 N. Y. 420, 134 N. E. 330, 331, 23 A. L. R. 401, and must be governed by the legal principles declared therein. In that case a dairyman's chauffeur, while driving his employer's car along the street after having delivered certain dairy products, was stabbed without cause by an insane person who was running amuck upon the street; and it was claimed there, as it is here, that the accident did not arise out of a street risk. In holding to the contrary, the court said: "If the work itself involves exposure to perils of the street, strange, unanticipated, and infrequent though they may be, the employee passes along the streets when on his master's occasions under the protection of the statute. This is the rule unequivocally laid down by the House of Lords in England: 'When a workman is sent into the street on his master's business, * * * his employment necessarily involves exposure to the risks of the streets and injury from such a cause (necessarily) arises out of his employment.' Finlay, L. C., in Dennis v. White (1917) L. R. App. Cas. 479 [Ann. Cas. 1917E, 325, 15 N. C. C. A. 294]. So we have to concern ourselves only with the question whether claimant's accident arose out of a street risk. Cases may arise where one is hurt in the street, but where the risk is of a general nature, not peculiar to the street. Lightning strikes fortuitously in the street; bombs dropped by enemy aircraft do not expose to special danger persons in a street as distinguished from those in houses. Allcock v. Rogers (1918) House of Lords [W. N. 96, 87 L. J. K. B. N. S. 693, 118 L. T. N. S. 386, 34 Times L. R. 324, 62 Sol. Jo. 421] 11 B. W. C. C. 149. The danger must result from the place to make it a street risk, but that is enough if the workman is in the place by reason of his employment, and in the discharge of his duty to his employer. The street becomes a dangerous place when street brawlers, highwaymen, escaping criminals, or violent madmen are afoot therein as they sometimes are. The danger of being struck by them by accident is a street risk because it is incident to passing through or being on the street when dangerous characters are abroad. Particularly on the crowded streets of a great city, not only do vehicles collide, pavements become out of repair, and crowds jostle, but mad or biting dogs may run wild, gunmen may discharge their weapons, police officers may shoot at fugitives fleeing from justice, or other things may happen from which accidental injuries result to people on the streets which are peculiar to the use of the streets and do not commonly happen indoors."

The same reasoning was applied in a number of other cases. In Greenberg v. Voit, 250 N. Y. 543, 166 N. E. 318, the employee was sweeping the front stoop of a building in the performance of his duties as janitor, and was killed by gangsters who passed through the street in an automobile shooting indiscriminately; and it was held that the injury and death arose out of the employment. In Roberts v. Newcomb & Co., 234 N. Y. 553, 138 N. E. 443, the claimant was employed as outside man for a general printing firm, and, while passing along Wall street in New York in the performance of his duties, he was injured as a result of a bomb explosion; and it was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment, and consequently was compensable. In Mahowald v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 134 Minn. 113, 158 N. W. 913, 915, 159 N. W. 565, a teamster employed by a furniture company was driving along a public street in the discharge of his duties, and, while passing along the street in front of a tall building under construction, was killed by a heavy load of steel beams falling on him as it was being hoisted to the top of said building. It was held that the accident arose out of his employment; the court saying: "Although the risk from the accident in question may be said to be external to the employment, yet the employment caused a special degree of exposure to the risk."

The theory upon which compensation is awarded in the class of accidents above mentioned is that the causal connection between the employment and the injury, which is essential to make it compensable, consists in the fact that the employment requires the presence of the employee upon the street and the fact that the injury was caused by some human or mechanical instrumentality incidental to the use of the street. In other words, as said in Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 36 Cal. App. 280, 171 P. 1088, 1089, with respect to the facts of that case, "The causative danger was peculiar to the work, in that, had he [the employee] not been upon the street in the course of his duty, he would not have been injured." And, as held in Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 406, 224 P. 744, the fact that the injuries to the employee are not of a kind to be anticipated nor peculiar to the employment in which he is engaged does not defeat the claim to compensation. To the same effect is General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 653, 200 P. 419. And under the modern rule now followed in England and all American jurisdictions except Massachusetts (see note II [d] 51 A. L. R. 514), the situation is not altered by the fact that the risk is one to which everyone else upon the street is also exposed (Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra); the vital question in such cases being "whether the employment exposed the workman to the risk by sending him on to the street, common though such risks were to all on the street." Katz v. Kadans, supra.

In support of their position, petitioners emphasize certain language used argumentatively in the decision in the case of Storm v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 4, 214 P. 874; but an inspection of the facts of that case discloses that the dictum relied upon has no application here, because that was not a "street risk" case; the employee having been injured while working indoors.

It is our opinion that the authorities here-inabove cited fully sustain the determination of the respondent commission that Melke's injury arose out of his employment. The award is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MIDDLETON.★ (Cr. 1104.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 9, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 24, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1930.

Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 998, 1202(6) — Judgment on pleas of guilty to forgery and prior convictions will not be vacated on ground defendant was not committed by magistrate (Pen. Code §§ 990, 995, 995a, 996).

Judgment entered on plea of guilty of forgery and prior convictions will not be vacated on ground that defendant had never been examined or committed by any magistrate on offense for which judgment was rendered under Pen. Code §§ 990, 995, 996, since reference in section 996 to "last section" must be read as still referring to section 995, notwithstanding enactment of section 995a by St. 1927, p. 1756.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

William W. Middleton was convicted of forgery and prior offenses on a plea of guilty. From an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

William W. Middleton, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. On the 5th day of January, 1928, an information was filed in the superior court of the county of Plumas, accusing the defendant, William Middleton, of the crime of forgery, in that he forged a certain instrument set out in words and figures in the information; also charging that before the commission of the offense charged in the information the defendant was convicted of a felony in the United States District Court of Utah on or about the 7th day of May, 1921; also accusing the defendant of having been convicted of a felony in the district court of Missoula county, state of Montana, on or about the 25th day of September, 1922; and further accusing the defendant of having been convicted of a felony in the superior court of the county of San Diego, on or about the 20th day of November, 1923. Upon being arraigned upon the information referred to, and being informed, by the superior court, of his right to be represented by counsel, the defendant waived the appointment of counsel, and, upon the information being read, the defendant entered a plea of guilty to the offense charged in the information, and also a like plea of guilty to all the charges of prior felonies alleged against him. Within the time allowed by law, the defendant appeared for judgment, and, upon being informed by the court of the proceedings had and taken against him upon the information referred to, and being further asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, the defendant answered that he had none, whereupon the court ordered that the defendant be imprisoned in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom, for the term to be fixed as provided by law. Thereafter the defendant moved the court to enter an order annulling, vacating, and setting aside the judgment just referred to on the ground that the defendant had never been examined or committed by any magistrate upon the offense for which said judgment was rendered, and that said judgment was void upon its face. This order being denied, the defendant appeals therefrom.

Upon this appeal the appellant has presented to the court a voluminous brief collecting practically all the cases touching upon the formality, the sufficiency and insufficiency of the orders of commitment made by different magistrates following the preliminary examinations of persons accused of public offenses. It may be admitted that these cases show that the order made by the committing magistrate in the instant case is defective in form, and possibly insufficient in substance; at least it is somewhat ambiguous and uncertain; but even if such admission be made, the defendant is not in a position now to raise the objections relied upon on this appeal. This is shown by a review of a few sections of the Penal Code. Section 990 of that Code specifies that upon the arraignment of a defendant he may, in answer to the arraignment, move to set aside the demurrer or plead to the indictment or information. Section 995 of that Code, so far as it relates to the information, permits the defendant to file a motion to set aside the information on the ground "that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate." And section 996 of that same Code reads as follows: "If the motion to set aside the indictment or information is not made, the defendant is precluded from afterwards taking the objections mentioned in the last section."

At the time of the enactment of sections 995 and 996 of the Penal Code there was no such section as "995a." Therefore section 996 must be read, in its reference to the last section, as it stood prior to the enactment of section 995a of the Penal Code in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1756). The two sections, 995 and 996 of the Penal Code, were both enacted February 14, 1872, and though subsequently amended in certain particulars, contained the portions of the section pertaining to these cases, and, as enacted in 1872, down to and until the enactment of section 995a of the Penal Code, 996 immediately followed section 995, and its reference to the preceding section was definite and certain. Not being referred to in section 995a as enacted in 1927, and not containing anything which conflicts with section 996 of the Penal Code, the reference in 996 of the Penal Code to the last section must be read as still referring to section 995 of the Penal Code. A reading of section 996 of the Penal Code would seem of itself to show a lack of merit in the appellant's contention made upon this appeal. However, a few cases may be cited. In People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 P. 204, a situation similar to the facts presented here was considered, and the court there said: "The objection that there was no preliminary examination and commitment of the defendant by a magistrate before the filing of an information is neither a ground of a motion for a new trial nor for a motion in arrest of judgment, and is waived if not taken by a motion to set aside the information upon the arraignment of the defendant."

To the same effect is the case of People v. Ronsse, 26 Cal. App. 100, 146 P. 65, where it was sought to raise the question of the legality of the defendant's commitment after conviction and judgment. It was there held that the defendant, not having made a motion as provided for in section 995 of the Penal Code, was precluded under the provisions of section 996 from urging the objection after conviction and judgment. That the rule likewise applies to indictments and shows that section 995 of the Penal Code must be complied with or the right to make such motions is waived, see the following cases: People v. Johnston, 48 Cal. 549; People v. King, 28 Cal. 265; People v. Stacey, 34 Cal. 307.

It necessarily follows from these citations that the order of the superior court denying the defendant's motion was correct and should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 29, 1930.

1. Pleading ⚡34(1)—Pleading must be liberally construed for purpose of determining effect with view to substantial justice between parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 452).

In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 452.

2. Negligence ⚡117—Contributory negligence, if relied upon as defense, must be specially pleaded.

Contributory negligence, if relied upon as a defense, must be specially pleaded, and facts constituting such negligence must be alleged and must show causal connection with injury.

3. Negligence ⚡117—Defense of contributory negligence does not require confession of negligence on part of defendant.

Defense of contributory negligence, though in effect a plea in confession and avoidance, does not require confession of negligence of defendant before setting up negligence of plaintiff as a defense.

4. Automobiles ⚡302—Answer alleging that automobile without any fault on part of defendant city and by want of due care was propelled over precipice was sufficient as plea of contributory negligence.

Answer of city, in action against it to recover damages for death of driver of automobile alleged to have been caused by defective condition of street, which alleged that without any fault on part of defendant and by want of due care in management of automobile said automobile was propelled over a precipice, was sufficient to constitute a plea of contributory negligence, in that the averment that defendant was without any fault refers to management of automobile, and not to alleged failure to maintain street in a safe condition.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡796—City's failure to maintain barriers at street terminus or to otherwise guard the same was not "nuisance" (Civ. Code, § 3479).

Failure of city to maintain barriers at terminus of street at precipice reasonably sufficient to prevent accident, or to light or otherwise guard the same, did not constitute a nuisance within Civ. Code, § 3479, as respecting defense of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Nuisance.]

6. Counties ⚡143—Municipal corporations ⚡802—Schools and school districts ⚡89—Contributory negligence is defense to actions to recover against county, municipality, or school district for injuries resulting from dangerous condition of streets, highways, or property (St. 1923, p. 675).

Liability under St. 1923, p. 675, of a county, municipality, or school district for injuries resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, or property, is based upon negligence of agents or servants, and contributory negligence is defense to actions to recover therefor.

7. Municipal corporations ⚡755(1)—Generally, liability of municipal corporation for injuries from defects or obstructions in streets is for negligence only.

Generally, liability of a municipal corporation for injuries from defects or obstructions in its streets is for negligence only, and it is not an insurer of the safety of travelers, but is required to exercise ordinary care to maintain streets in a reasonably safe condition for those using them in a proper manner.

8. Automobiles ⇨305(10)—Evidence of automobile driver's intoxication was relevant to issue of contributory negligence in action against city for death from defective street.

In action to recover against city for death of automobile driver alleged to have been caused by defective condition of streets within municipality, evidence of decedent's physical or mental condition due to intoxication was relevant on issue of contributory negligence, though constituting no excuse for negligence on part of defendant.

9. Negligence ⇨72—Rule requiring person confronted with imminent danger to act only as reasonably prudent person applies only to those using due care.

Rule that one who, without negligence on his part, is suddenly confronted with imminent danger, is required to act only as a reasonably prudent person would act under the same circumstances, can be invoked only by those whose position of peril was not caused by their own want of due care.

10. Trial ⇨312(1)—Trial court has duty, if requested by jury, to give on any day all instructions properly applicable to case whether previously given or not (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 134, 614).

Trial court, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 134, 614, has duty, if requested by a jury when deliberating on their verdict, to give on any day all instructions properly applicable to case, regardless of whether same have not been previously given.

11. Trial ⇨312(1)—Refusal on jury's request to charge relative to city's liability in case automobile, when plunging over precipice, was partly on private property, held erroneous.

In action against city to recover damages by reason of death of automobile driver alleged to have been caused by defective condition of streets, refusal of court to instruct jury, pursuant to their request, relative to liability of city in case automobile at time of plunging over precipice was partially on private property and partly on property belonging to city, held erroneous as being applicable to issues adduced by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action by Agnes I. Brooks, as administratrix of the estate of Egbert William Brooks, deceased, against the City of Monterey. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Metson and E. B. Mering, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Argyll Campbell, of Monterey, and J. A. Bardin, of Salinas, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action by the administratrix of the estate of Egbert William Brooks, deceased, against the city of Monterey to recover damages for the death of the decedent alleged to have been caused by the defective condition of a street within the municipality. A jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed.

It is contended that contributory negligence, upon which the defendant relied as one of its defenses, was not pleaded, and also that the defense was not available in the present action; further, that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, and that the court erred in certain of its instructions to the jury, and by refusing others asked by the plaintiff.

The city of Monterey is a municipal corporation operating under a freeholders' charter. The street on which the accident happened is called Reeside street, its northeasterly terminus being at the edge of a declivity about 13 feet in height above the waters of Monterey bay. From this point the street, which is paved and curbed, extends southwesterly for about 4½ blocks. The complaint alleged that from September 16, 1924, until the day of the accident the terminus of the street was unlighted, unguarded, without barriers, signs, notices, or a watchman, by reason of which the street was in a dangerous and defective condition; that during all of said times the city manager, the street superintendent, and the council of the city had knowledge and notice of the condition described, but failed and neglected to remedy the same within a reasonable time after receiving such notice and knowledge. It was further alleged that at about 3 o'clock a. m. on October 11, 1925, the decedent "was traveling in his automobile on said Reeside street and was wholly unaware of said dangerous and defective condition, and was proceeding with due care for his own safety without fault on his part and while so traveling drove over said precipice into the bay of Monterey by reason of said unlighted and unguarded condition of said street and as a result lost his life. * * *

The answer, after denying the existence of the conditions described in the complaint or that the officers of the defendant had notice or knowledge thereof, alleges as a further answer "and as and for a separate and distinct plea of contributory negligence" the following: "That the said Egbert William Brooks was at the time and place alleged in said Third Amended Complaint driving the said automobile upon said Reeside Street, a public highway in said city of Monterey, County of Monterey, State of California, while he was then and there under the influence of intoxicating liquor; that he was driving said automobile at an excessive rate of speed and in a reckless manner, and that said Egbert William Brooks failed to use due care or caution under the circumstances for the protection of himself and said automobile and that said Egbert William Brooks was generally negligent and careless in and about the operation and control of said automobile at said time and place, and so carelessly, negligently and improperly managed said automobile that by reason thereof, defendant is informed and believes, and on such information and belief alleges that said automobile was propelled across said Reeside Avenue to the left hand side of the highway of said Reeside Street in the direction in which said Egbert William Brooks was then and there traveling and across the sidewalk on said left hand side of said Reeside Street and that without any fault on the part of the defendant, and by want of due care in the management of said automobile by said Egbert William Brooks, said automobile was propelled over a precipice into the Bay of Monterey at a point northeasterly of said termination of Reeside Street and thereby said Egbert William Brooks lost his life, which said acts of carelessness and negligence on the part of said Egbert William Brooks proximately contributed to the death of said Egbert William Brooks and to the alleged damages, if any, there were."

[1-7] In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties. Section 452, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Wickersham, 153 Cal. 603, 96 P. 311. It is the rule that contributory negligence, if relied upon as a defense, must be specially pleaded. The facts constituting such negligence must be alleged and must show a causal connection with the injury (Crabbe v. Mammoth Mining Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714), but the defense, while in effect a plea in confession and avoidance (Gett v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 192 Cal. 621, 221 P. 376), does not require the defendant to confess negligence before setting up the negligence of the plaintiff as a defense (Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., 84 Cal. App. 337, 258 P. 397; 29 Cyc. [Pleading] 582; 1 Thompson on Negligence [2d Ed.] § 390, p. 375; Elliott on Railroads [3d Ed.] § 2085). Appellant insists, however, that in the absence of a confession of negligence by the defendant the above pleading was but a denial of negligence on its part, and insufficient as a plea of contributory negligence. In this connection stress is laid upon the allegation that "without any fault upon the part of the defendant and by want of due care in the management of said automobile * * * said automobile was propelled over a precipice into the Bay of Monterey. * * *" It is plain that the averment that the defendant was "without any fault" refers to the management of the automobile, and not to the alleged failure of the defendant to maintain the street in a safe condition. The pleadings stated facts having a causal connection with the injury and which were sufficient within the rule stated in Crabbe v. Mammoth Mining Co., supra, to constitute a plea of contributory negligence. While it has been held that the defense of contributory negligence is not applicable to an action sounding in nuisance (46 Cor. Jur. [Nuisances] § 29, p. 665; Bowman v. Humphrey, 132 Iowa, 234, 109 N. W. 714, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1111, 11 Ann. Cas. 131), it is not claimed that the defendant owned or controlled the land at the foot of the declivity or was in any way responsible for the dangerous condition existing at the terminus of the street other than that it failed to maintain barriers at that point reasonably sufficient to prevent accidents or to light or otherwise guard the same. The statutory definition of a nuisance is: "Anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any * * * public park, square, street, or highway. * * *" Civ. Code, § 3479. And so far as shown, no condition within the above definition was created or maintained by the defendant, plaintiff's sole ground for complaint being that the defendant, after its officers had notice or knowledge of the condition, neglected to provide barriers or other means reasonably sufficient to prevent injury to those using the street. St. 1923, p. 675. That the liability under the above act of a county, municipality, or school district for injuries resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of the public streets, highways, or property, is based upon the negligence of its agents or servants, and that contributory negligence is a defense to such actions, was in effect held in the following cases: Huff v. Compton City School District, 92 Cal. App. 44, 267 P. 918; Gorman v. County of Sacramento, 92 Cal. App. 656, 268 P. 1083; Dawson v. Tulare Union High School District (Cal. App.) 276 P. 424. Moreover, the rule is general that the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries from defects or obstructions in its streets is for negligence only, that it is not an insurer of the safety of travelers, but is required to exercise ordinary care to maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition for those using them in a proper manner, and that contributory negligence precludes a recovery. 43 Cor. Jur. (Municipal Corporations) § 1785, pp. 998, 999; Laney v. Chesterfield County, 29 S. C. 140, 7 S. E. 56; Bush v. Wathen, 104 Ky. 548, 47 S. W. 599; Quimby v. Woodbury, 63 N. H. 370; Giffen v. City of Lewiston, 6 Idaho, 231, 55 P. 545; Kelley v. Boston, 180 Mass. 233, 62 N. E. 259; McQuillin, Municipal Corporations (2d Ed.) § 2820; Elliott on Roads and Streets (4th Ed.) § 1153.

[8] Evidence was received tending to show that decedent was intoxicated during the evening previous to the accident, and in this connection the plaintiff proposed an instruction stating in substance that if the jury found that the terminus of the street was in a dangerous and defective condition, that it was neither lighted nor guarded in a manner sufficient to warn travelers of its condition, and that one driving thereon and using ordinary care for his own safety would be likely to drive over the precipice, then the fact that the decedent was under the influence of intoxicants at the time of the accident could not be considered as contributory negligence. This instruction was refused. While the intoxication of the decedent was no excuse for negligence on the part of the defendant (Robinson v. Pioche et al., 5 Cal. 461), and it has been held that mere abstraction or lack of attention to the dangerous condition of a public way, even by one intoxicated, cannot be assigned as contributory negligence, nevertheless, evidence of the decedent's physical or mental condition due to intoxication was relevant to the issue of contributory negligence (Brkljaca v. Ross, 60 Cal. App. 431, 213 P. 290; Baldwin v. Pacific Auto Stages, Inc., 83 Cal. App. 635, 257 P. 130; 45 Cor. Jur. [Negligence] § 551, p. 997), and the court accordingly gave the following instructions, which clearly stated the rule and fully covered the instructions offered by the plaintiff: "The mere fact that one goes upon the highway in an intoxicated condition and is injured by driving his automobile over an embankment is not of itself proof of negligence of such driver, but such an intoxicated condition may be considered together with all the other facts and circumstances of the accident in order to determine whether or not the person so injured was guilty of negligence." The plaintiff also offered the following instructions, which were refused:

"If you find by a preponderance of evidence that Reeside Street at its termination in the bay was, on the morning of October 11th, 1925, at the time of the accident, in a dangerous and defective condition by reason of a declivity there, and that said dangerous and defective condition was unguarded or unlighted, and you further find by a preponderance of evidence that the governing board or council of the City of Monterey, or R. M. Dorton, the City Manager, or Manual S. Perry, the Street Superintendent of the City of Monterey then and there had knowledge or notice of said dangerous and defective condition, and that at said time said officers of said city, or any of them, had such notice or knowledge or notice of such condition for a reasonable time prior to the happening of said accident, in which to remedy such condition or in which to take such steps as might be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous and defective condition, and you find by a preponderance of evidence that they or any of them failed or neglected to take such steps as might be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous and defective condition, and if in addition to them you further find that at said time said deceased was traveling in his automobile upon said street and was at said time using ordinary care for his own protection and ran over said street and said declivity into the bay and thereby lost his life, then I instruct you that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant. I further instruct that at said time it is presumed that said deceased was using ordinary care, and the burden is on the defendant to prove that the deceased was not using ordinary care."

"I further instruct you that if you find that said deceased suddenly discovered when a few feet from the precipice that he was in danger and, in order to avoid danger, turned his automobile to the left and ran across the sidewalk and then over the precipice and thereby lost his life, and that in so doing, he was making the best endeavor that a reasonable man could make under the circumstances, then I instruct you that the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

[9] The first of the above instructions was fully covered by others given by the court. As to the second, while it is the rule that one who without negligence on his part is suddenly confronted with imminent danger is required to act only as a reasonably prudent person would act under the same circumstances (19 Cal. Jur. [Negligence] § 36, p. 598), the rule can be invoked only by those whose position of peril is not caused by their own want of due care (Neff v. United Railroads, etc., 188 Cal. 723, 207 P. 243; Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066), and where, as here, there was evidence tending to show that decedent's perilous position was due to his own negligence, the omission therefrom of this question was sufficient ground for the rejection of the proposed instruction (McRae v. Erickson, 1 Cal. App. 326, 329, 82 P. 209; Vedder v. Birely, 92 Cal. App. 52, 267 P. 724).

[10, 11] The record shows that at 2 o'clock p. m. on Saturday, May 26, 1928, after the cause had been submitted to the jury, they were at their request brought into court, and in the presence of counsel the following occurred: A juror: "Your honor, we want to know if it would make any difference to the city of Monterey's liability—the fact of this car going off the sidewalk, or had it gone off the street. The evidence shows that the car did not go off the street. We are agreed upon that." The Court: "What you want is to know whether it would make any difference that the car, if it did, go off the street before reaching the end of Reeside Avenue?" A juror: "No, we want to know if it would make any difference in the city's liability if it had gone straight off the end of the street, or as it did go, off the sidewalk and on private property." The Court: "I wonder if you gentlemen can agree upon the testimony. * * * I think the testimony upon that point was that it was undisputed that part of the automobile, while traveling after it struck the curb, was on private property, and part was in Reeside Avenue." A juror: "Yes, we are agreed upon that testimony." Upon objection by counsel for respondent that no new instruction might properly be given on a holiday, the court declined to do more than read portions of its previous charge to the jury. Appellant offered an instruction on the question asked by the juror, and upon the above objection being sustained, requested that the trial be continued to the following Monday for reargument, which motion was denied. Section 134 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "No court, other than the supreme court, must be open for the transaction of judicial business on any of the holidays mentioned in section 10, except for the following purposes: 1. To give upon their request, instructions to jury when deliberating on their verdict. * * *" It is clear from the language of the section that it was designed to meet situations of the kind here presented, and there can be no reasonable doubt that a court is empowered if requested by a jury deliberating on their verdict to give on any day all instructions properly applicable to the case (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 134, 614), and it is immaterial that the same have not been previously given.

The evidence established the fact that at a point about 40 feet from the terminus of the street the automobile left the pavement, passed over the curb, to the sidewalk, and proceeded toward the declivity with its left wheels on private property, and the right wheels upon the sidewalk. The inference might reasonably have been drawn from the circumstances shown that decedent, realizing his danger, attempted to turn his automobile to the left in order to avoid the declivity. Had the jury also found, as they might have, that decedent's position of peril was not due to his previous negligence, the evidence would have supported the conclusion that his acts in attempting to escape the danger were those of a prudent person under similar circumstances. It is clear that the jury was in doubt as to the effect of the above upon the liability of the respondent; and while the court was not bound to give any particular instruction, it was nevertheless its duty to instruct upon all issues upon which evidence had been adduced, and appellant was entitled to proper instructions bearing upon any legitimate inference which might be drawn from the evidence. Thomas v. Visalia Electric R. R. Co., 169 Cal. 658, 147 P. 972. The record discloses no instruction on the question asked by the jury, nor does it set forth the instruction proposed in that connection by appellant, but the court having refused to entertain the offer or give any new instructions, no further action by appellant was required.

After a careful review of the entire record, including the evidence, we are satisfied that the question should have been answered, and are of the opinion that the failure to do so was prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant, resulting as a reasonable probability in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE ex rel. STATE BOARD OF CHIROPRACTIC EXAMINERS v. BERKELEY CHIROPRACTIC COLLEGE. (Civ. 7187.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1930.

Appeal and error $\S$ 554(2), 627(2)—Appeal must be dismissed after statutory time for filing record, in absence of bill of exceptions or request to prepare transcript (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 953a).

Where no bill of exceptions was proposed or settled, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 650, nor any request filed for preparation of transcript under section 953a, and no extensions of time were granted to prepare record, appeal must be dismissed after expiration of statutory period for preparation and filing of record.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action in quo warranto by the People, on the relation of the State Board of Chiropractic Examiners, to dissolve the Berkeley Chiropractic College, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Sawyer & Sawyer and Frank W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Frank V. Kington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The Attorney General moves to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground of the failure to file a transcript.

The motion is supported by the certificate of the county clerk, and the facts stated therein are not contradicted. It appears therefrom that the only step taken by appellant in furtherance of the appeal was to file a notice of appeal on March 5, 1929. There has been no bill of exceptions proposed or settled as provided in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor was any request filed for the preparation of a transcript in accordance with the provisions of section 953a of said code. No extensions of time have been granted to prepare the record on appeal under either method above mentioned, and the statutory period within which such a record may be prepared and filed has long since expired. It follows, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed. General Motors, etc., Corp. v. Holman, 63 Cal. App. 17, 217 P. 1086; Catania v. Guccione, 60 Cal. App. 717, 214 P. 495; Rule V of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. It is so ordered.

NELSON v. THOMAS, Marshal, etc.
(Civ. 6651.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

- 1. Appeal and error ⇨32—Whether superior court judgment, on appeal from municipal court, is appealable to District Court of Appeal, depends on whether cause arose outside city limits.

Whether appeal to District Court of Appeal lies from judgment of superior court, affirming, modifying, or reversing judgment of municipal court, depends on whether cause of action arose, as disclosed by record, inside or outside limits of incorporated city where municipal court is situated.

- 2. Evidence ⇨10(4)—Court judicially knows Beverly Hills township is outside limits of city of Los Angeles.

Court takes judicial notice that township of Beverly Hills is outside of corporate limits of city of Los Angeles.

- 3. Appeal and error ⇨32—As respects appeal from superior court judgment, affirming municipal court judgment, cause of action for defendant in attachment accrued against marshal, where latter paid to plaintiff in attachment money received to secure release from attachment.

Where defendant, to obtain release of his automobile from attachment writ issued out of municipal court, paid deputy marshal a specified sum in lieu of bond outside corporate limits of city, and thereafter, without defendant's knowledge or order of court, marshal, within city limits, paid over said money to plaintiff in attachment suit and procured dismissal of action with prejudice, marshal's tortious act in paying over said money gave defendant a cause of action against marshal for money had and received, which cause of action accrued within city limits, as respects right to appeal to District Court of Appeal from superior court judgment, affirming judgment of municipal court.

- 4. Appeal and error ⇨32—Allegation that defendant became indebted to plaintiff within county held not to preclude claim cause arose within city, as respects appellate review.

Allegation in complaint in action for money had and received that defendant became indebted to plaintiff "within the county" of Los Angeles held not to preclude plaintiff from asserting that cause of action arose within city of Los Angeles, as respects defendant's right to appeal to District Court of Appeal from judgment of superior court, affirming municipal court judgment for plaintiff; quoted words being used merely by way of pleading that action arose within geographical jurisdiction of municipal court, and not as assertion that cause of action arose somewhere in county outside city limits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by Charles F. Nelson against Charles R. Thomas, as marshal of the Municipal Court, City of Los Angeles. Judgment of the municipal court adverse to defendant was affirmed by the superior court, and defendant appeals. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. E. Spencer and Alfred E. Dennis, both of Los Angeles, for respondent

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This case is before us on respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal, because of lack of jurisdiction in this court. The action was commenced, tried, and determined adversely to the defendant marshal of the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles in the last-named tribunal. From the judgment of that court, awarding the plaintiff $510.90, costs, and interest, the marshal appealed to the superior court, where the judgment of the municipal court was affirmed. From such judgment of affirmance, the defendant marshal has appealed to this court.

[1] "Whether an appeal to this court lies from a judgment of the superior court affirming, modifying, or reversing a judgment of the municipal court, * * * depends upon where the cause of action arose as disclosed by the record—whether inside or outside the limits of the incorporated city where the municipal court is situated." Johnston v. Wolf (Cal. App.) 280 P. 980, 981. If, therefore, the cause of action herein arose in the city of Los Angeles, an appeal does not lie to this court, and the judgment of the superior court was final; if it arose elsewhere within the jurisdiction of the municipal court, this court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The only question presented by the motion therefore is: Where did the cause of action arise?

[2, 3] There is no dispute as to the facts as stated in the affidavit filed in support of the motion and in the findings of the municipal court. They are as follows: The respondent resides in the township of Beverly Hills, which, we take judicial knowledge, is outside of the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles. Johnston v. Wolf, supra. In the latter part of February, 1927, one of the marshal's deputies called at respondent's residence and attached the latter's automobile pursuant to a writ of attachment issued out of the municipal court in an action brought by a collection agency against him. Respondent, in lieu of a bond on release of attachment, and to prevent the taking of his automobile under the writ, then and there paid to the marshal, through the deputy, the sum of $510.90 in cash. Although the money was received by the marshal in Beverly Hills township, for the sole purpose of securing the release of the attachment, and not in satisfaction or settlement of the claim sued on, he took the money to his office in the city of Los Angeles, and, after keeping it there for at least three days, without any judgment or order of the court, and without any order from the defendant (respondent here), and without the latter's knowledge, paid it to the plaintiff in the attachment suit and procured from it a dismissal of the action with prejudice. Respondent, on learning what had occurred, made demand upon the marshal, at his office in the city of Los Angeles, for the return of his deposit, and, upon the marshal's refusal to comply with this demand, instituted the present action for money had and received.

It is appellant's contention "that, since the cash bond was taken in Beverly Hills in lieu of property taken in Beverly Hills from a defendant residing in and then in Beverly Hills, the obligation to return it, if there be any such obligation, was to return the money to that defendant in Beverly Hills," and hence that the cause of action arose there, and not in the city of Los Angeles, where the marshal had his office, and where the money was diverted from the purpose for which it had been handed over to the marshal, and by him paid to the plaintiff in the attachment suit in satisfaction of its claim. We are unable to agree with this contention. So long as the marshal retained the money in his possession for the purpose for which it had been handed to him, the respondent could have had no cause of action against him, unless the attachment suit had resulted in a judgment in favor of respondent, and the attachment had therefore been dissolved, and the marshal had then refused to return the cash deposit received in lieu of an undertaking. Nor would there have been a cause of action against the marshal, if he had deposited the money in court in lieu of such undertaking. But when the marshal, to quote appellant's own words as contained in his brief on this motion, "misunderstanding the purpose for which the cash was given to him (no malicious conduct is charged), brought the money into the city of Los Angeles, where he paid it over to the company which was suing Dr. Nelson, and caused them to dismiss the action against Dr. Nelson 'with prejudice,'" he, although acting without any wrongful intention, was in contemplation of law guilty of a misappropriation or conversion of the money. It was this tortious act, committed in the city of Los Angeles, which gave rise to respondent's cause of action. That cause of action arose immediately upon the unauthorized transfer of the money to the plaintiff in the attachment suit, and not prior thereto. Bell v. Bank of California, 153 Cal. 234, 242, 94 P. 889. The fact that respondent had the right to and did waive the tort and sue in assumpsit (see 3 Cal. Jur. 378, and cases cited therein) does not, of course, affect the fact that what created a cause of action in favor of respondent was the misuse of the money by the marshal, which misuse or diversion thereof from the purpose for which he had received it occurred in the city of Los Angeles.

Additional light is thrown on the problem before us by decisions in cases wherein the statute of limitations is discussed; for, although the question of time rather than that of place is involved in most of them, here the two are most closely interrelated. Thus it has been held that the cause of action ordinarily accrues when the obligation or liability matures, so that a suit may be based upon it (California Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 112 P. 274, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 729; Merguire v. O'Donnell, 139 Cal. 6, 72 P. 337, 96 Am. St. Rep. 91), and that, if the liability is based upon a tort, the cause of action arises immediately upon the commission of the wrongful act (Lattin v. Gillett, 95 Cal. 320, 30 P. 545, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115), while if it is based upon a contractual relation, express or implied, it arises at the date of the breach and not at the date of the damage caused thereby (Crawford v. Duncan, 61 Cal. App. 647, 215 P. 573). It has also been held that, where a public officer is under obligation to retain personal control or custody of money, a cause of action accrues against him for its recovery from the time that, through his neglect, such control is lost. County of San Diego v. Dauer, 131 Cal. 199, 63 P. 338. Applying these principles to the case in hand, it is evident that the cause of action arose in the city of Los Angeles at the time of the wrongful diversion there of the respondent's money from the purpose for which it had been deposited with the marshal to another and unauthorized purpose.

[4] Appellant makes the additional point that, because respondent alleged in his complaint that the marshal became indebted to him "within the county" of Los Angeles, he thereby assumed a position which precludes him from now asserting that the cause of action arose within the city of Los Angeles. There is no merit to this contention. The words quoted were undoubtedly used merely by way of pleading that the action was within the geographical jurisdiction of the municipal court, and not as an assertion that the cause of action arose somewhere in the county outside of the limits of the city.

The appeal is dismissed.
